Terrorists claim to have killed U.S. hostage

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon - A Shiite Moslem terrorist group claimed it had killed American hostage William Buckley in retaliation for Israel's raid on PLO headquarters in Tunisia, the leading independent newspaper

Islamic Jihad "stated it has carried out the execution," the daily An-Nahar said in its report accompanying the terrorist group's statement, which the paper published in its Friday morning editions.

The same text also appeared in a leftist newspaper, As-Safir.

An-Nahar said the statement and a color photograph of Buckley looking pale and drawn were delivered to the newspaper's West Beirut office at 1 a.m. Friday. The paper published the photograph.

The statement, written in ungrammatical Arabic, said: "We declare that in revenge for the blood of our martyrs, we announce the execution of the resident American agent in the Middle East and the first political officer at the American Embassy in Beirut, William Buckley, right after the publication of this statement."

"They're telling us that by the time we got the paper out he'd be dead," said an official at An-Nahar, who declined to be identified.

Buckley, 57, of Medford, Mass., was kidnapped March 16, 1984, outside his home. He had been in captivity the longest of the six Americans kidnapped and believed being held in Beirut.

Islamic Jahad, the underground terrorist group which claimed it bombed the headquarters of U.S. Marines and French peacekeepers in Beirut, in October 1982, has said it is holding all six Americans; plus two Frenchmen and a British citizen.

The terrorists have demanded the release of 17 of their comrades convicted and imprisoned in Kuwait for the December 1983 terrorist bombings in the U.S. and French embassies in Kuwait.

Three of the 17 have been sentenced to death by hanging. Kuwait has refused to release any of them. Buckley, a bachelor, became a Foreign Service officer in 1983, after 18 years as a civilian employee of the U.S. Army, serving in Washington, D.C., and Vietnam. He was assigned to Beirut, his first State Department post, in September 1983.

There are 11 other foreigners - French, British and Soviet citizens — who have been kidnapped and are believed being held in Lebanon. A Soviet Embassy official who had

The Islamic Jihad statement said: "We are responsible for the blood of Moslems in every part of the world and we understand tha American and Israel are responsible for the killing of Moslems in Tunisia."

It declared: "Therefore, we declare that in revenge for the blood of our martyrs, we announce the execution of the resident American agent in the Middle East and the first political officer at the American Embassy in Beirut, William Buckley, right after the publication of this statement.'

The statement said that Buckley was "tried and found guilty of involvement in American Intelligence crimes in this world."

Court says gun sellers liable to crime victims

By The Associated Press

ANNAPOLIS, Md. - People who make or sell small, cheap handguns should know they are used mainly by criminals and therefore can be sued by victims shot in criminal attacks with the so-called Saturday Night Specials, Maryland's highest court ruled Thursday.

The unanimous Court of appeals decision was the first in the nation to hold that the manufacturer or marketer of a handgun is liable for damages simply because the weapon is eventually used by a criminal to wound or kill.

The decision was hailed by gun foes as a major victory in their protracted battle to halt the sale of handguns in the United States. But National Rifle Association spokesperson Dave Warner called the ruling a "very bad decision" that could take away a cheap self-defense weapon from people who can't afford expen-

The ruling applies only to Saturday

Night Specials and not to better quality, more expensive handguns. It also applies only in Maryland, although spokespersons on both sides of the gun control issue said it could influence rulings in other states.

The liability question reached the Court of appeals in a case filed by Olen J. Kelley of Silver Spring, who was shot in a 1981 holdup of a supermarket in the suburbs of Washington, D.C.

Kelley, who recovered from wounds in the chest and shoulder, sued Rolm Gesellschaft, a West German firm that designed and marketed the weapon that was used to shoot him.

Before considering Kelley's lawsuit, the U.S. District Court in Baltimore asked the state court for a ruling on whether the manufacturer could be held liable.

The court said "the manufacturer or marketer of a Saturday Night Special knows...he is making or selling a product principally to be used in criminal activity.

Student Senate passed unanimously a resolution calling for equal representation on the Presidential Search Committee and passed a bill calling for senate review of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum proposal.

Senate also heard comments concerning the coliseum from a group of architecture students at its weekly meeting Thursday. The Presidential Search Committee resolution calls for the Board of Regents to correct the imbalance caused by the unanticipated addition of three alumni members to the committee. The resolution was sponsored by Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and student body president, and Mark Jones, senior in management and senate chairman.

Senate seeks balance on committee

Virgil Wiebe, senior in political science, proposed two amendments and a second section to the original Presidential Search Committee resolution. The amendments stated that the equal representation issue entails more than numerical equality and the "alumni currently serving on the committee do not adequately represent alumni geographically and by college interest." The second section said the imbalance should be corrected by either removing three alumni from the committee, including those not proposed by the Alumni Association, or by adding three faculty and three students to the committee. The two amendments did not pass. The second section was added to the resolution. Wiebe proposed the amendments because the regents added three alumni to the search committee.

"It's not the representation, but the way the Board of Regents added the members," Wiebe said. "I'm pretty angry about what they did."

Because of the power the candidates might perceive the regents has, the search committee may lose potential presidential candidates, said Catherine Sayler, a nondegree graduate. The candidates would not know who they would answer to.

Senate also heard and passed a bill concerning the presentation of the new pro-

MILAN, Italy - The Communist Party newspaper is printing capitalist stock prices for the first time since its founding in 1924. L'Unita began publishing the Milan stock exchange closing prices this week in resonse to letters from hundreds of readers, sources at the daily said.

The Italian party is the largest in the West and Italy's secondstrongest political force after the Christian Democrats. It often disagrees with the Soviet line, and its leaders recently have been debating the party's future role in a market society.

Switzerland sizzles after hurricane

GENEVA, Switzerland - Remnants of hurricane Gloria helped to make Thursday the warmest October day in Switzerland this century, a Swiss Meteorological Office spokesman said.

Temperatures reached 86 degrees Fahrenheit in Basel as most of the country enjoyed the summer-like conditions. Meteorologists said the remnants of Gloria, the powerful hurricane that moved up the East Coast of the United States last week, formed a low pressure zone between Iceland and the Irish coast that brought warm air from the south.

150 granted parole still being held

TOPEKA - The chairman of the parole board revealed Thursday that more than 150 people who had been granted parole were still being held last month in the state's crowded prison system.

Elwaine Pomeroy, chairman of the parole board - officially called the Kansas Adult Authority, said he was surprised by a recent Department of Corrections report which found that 154 inmates remained in prison on Sept. 5, even after they had been approved for release.

Pomeroy made the remarks during a hearing by the Special Committee on Federal and State Affairs. The panel later approved a measure for introduction in the 1986 Kansas Legislature that would strengthen requirements that state agencies purchase prison-made products whenever possible.

A large number of the 154 inmates who remained in prison had been paroled on the condition that they enter a drug or alcohol abuse program, said Pomeroy, who is a former state senator. However, he said many of the substance abuse programs across the state are operating at maximum capacity.

Most of the programs do not cater primarily to prisoners and put a higher priority on helping people in their communities who have not committed crimes, Pomeroy said.

The condition that a paroled prisoner must enter such a program is important, he said, because as much as 80 percent of crimes resulting in prison sentences are related to drugs or alcohol.

Another large portion of the paroled inmates who remained in prison were released on the condition that another state would handle their parole arrangements.

"There's no way you can force another state to take an inmate," said Pomeroy, who added that bureaucracy adds to the length of time an inmate must wait until being accepted by another state's parole officials.

Smaller portions of those who were in prison after being paroled remained because of a time lag between a parole decision and the prisoners' actual release, or because paroles were granted with conditions that inmates complete a rehabilitation program offered inside a correctional facility, Pomeroy said. Corrections officials said Thursday that as of Sept. 30, a record 4,539 prisoners were being housed in various prison facilities in the state, which have a maximum capacity of 4,973.

Founder talks of 'rude' treatment

DALLAS - Candy Lightner, stripped of two major roles in Mothers Against Drunk Driving, said Thursday the executive board of the group she founded had treated her so rudely "that if I hadn't cared so much about MADD, I would have left."

Lightner, who founded MADD after a drunken driver struck and killed her daughter in 1980, said the board had taken away her titles of board chairman and chief executive officer.

She remains president and chief spokeswoman of the group, but she said she had been working without a contract since June 30 because she and the board could not agree about keeping some matters confidential. She would not disclose her salary.

Lightner, 39, said the board also forbid her to communicate with chapters on pending board business.

"I feel they are trying to undermine me by sending information about me to some chapters," she said. "Those people have treated me so rudely that if I hadn't cared so much about MADD, I would have left."

Board member and spokesman Bob Frank denied any ill will toward Lightner, and said Thursday he hoped she would stay with

"When you start with just one chapter, one person can do all that she was doing," he said. "But we have grown so much that we wanted to make some changes.

"This organization is a national organization, run by a board of directors," he said. "No one person owns it."

Frank said MADD, a non-profit group with 360 chapters in the United States, will have revenues between $6 million and $8 million this year. The board will hold its annual meeting Oct. 11 in Hurst, a suburb of Fort Worth.

True Miami vicers become models

MIAMI - Seven real-life Miami detectives went from rags to riches for a day when Gentleman's Quarterly magazine used them as models in a four-page feature on "The Real Miami Vice."

The before-and-after feature in the October issue of the fashion magazine consists of two pages of the detectives from Metro-Dade's Organized Crime Bureau posed in a black-and-white photo. The magazine then declares that plainclothes officers "don't have to dress so plainly."

The following pages are in color and the seven, all gussied up, are shown in front of a pink art-deco hotel on Miami Beach

Sgt. Fernando Mendez sports a $550 pair of crocodile shoes. Sgt. Skip Pearson, who normally wears a sport shirt to work, was dressed up in a $978 cashmere-and-wool sport coat.

'No policeman I know can afford to run around in cashmere and silk...What I tear up arresting somebody I have to replace," he said. The detective said the fashions they wear in GQ bear as much resemblence to reality as the stylish television show "Miami Vice" does to real vice work.

But it was still fun to spend the day as a model, he added, even though the only pay was a free copy of the magazine.

Feminine activist gets Yale honor

NEW HAVEN, Conn. - Feminist Betty Friedan, whose 1963 book "The Feminine Mystique" helped reawaken the struggle for women's rights, has been named a Chubb Fellow at Yale University.

Friedan, who also founded the National Organization for Women and served as its first president, will visit Yale, an elite, once allmale school next week to meet informally with students.

The Chubb Fellowship program seeks to encourage students interested in government and public service careers. Each year, Yale names four or five Chubb Visiting Fellows.

The bill was sponsored by David Dakin, fifth-year student in architecture, and Kent Williams, sophomore in pre-design professions. It recognizes that $7 million in student funds are going toward the project, the redesign is underway because bids for the project were not within the prescibed budget, and "any redesign changes the scope of the contract."

The bill calls for the new plans, budget and drawings used for rebidding the coliseum be presented to student senate.

The legislation stipulates that the plans be presented to senate at the earliest possible time, before the regents approve plans for a redesigned coliseum.

Additionally, the bill calls on the senate chairman to organize implementation of the legislation and contact coliseum architect Bill Livingston, of Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita; George Miller, vice preesident for ad-ministration and finance; and other people involved.

During open period Gerald Salts, fifth-year architecture student, spoke about concerns of a group of architecture students. He said the students were concerned about the direction the University is going with the coliseum.

"Students are not being represented," Salts said.

Students voted on the original proposal of a 15,000 seat multi-purpose coliseum. Now the administration advocating construction of a 13,000-seat single-purpose building without student approval, he said. Salts distributed a fact sheet about the coliseum.

"We're trying to provide facts so you (student senate) can make decisions," Salts said.

Senate also passed the committee appointments for the Student Bond Refinancing Ad Hoc Committee.

The ad hoc committee will review proposals for the use of the $700,000 available through refinancing of the current debt. Recommendations about how the money will be spent will be made Oct. 24.

Senate also passed a bill revising the Student Governing Association by-laws. The amendment adds to the original by-laws the statement that should a student senator be elected to the position of senate chairman, the college left without representation will appoint a new representative.

Senate also passed the Closing Accounts bill sponsored by Senate Finance Committee. The bill approves appeals from campus organizations to keep any money left in a group's account from fiscal year

Administration's grant will aid other colleges

By TONI OGLESBY Collegian Reporter

Through a grant, the University's Center for Aging will be able to transfer its expertise to aid several Kansas community college gerontology programs.

The Center for Aging received the $106,000 grant from the Administration on Aging to assist in programming graduate-level gerontology courses at seven community colleges in western Kansas. Community colleges at Colby, Concordia, Dodge City, Garden City, Hutchinson, Liberal and Pratt, which comprise the Western Kansas Community Services Consortium, will be the recipients of graduate-level training provided by the AOA grant. The University, through the Department of Continuing Education, is currently a member of WKCSC.

The AOA grant is an outgrowth of another grant for the Center for Aging - the Fund for the Improvement of Post Secondary Education. The FIPSE grant has been used to assist the community colleges of WKCSC in developing gerontology curricula.

Downtown redevelopment shuffle

Store owners search for options

By SARAH KESSINGER Collegian Reporter

With the approach of construction for the Manhattan Regional Shopping Mall, several businesses in the downtown business district will need to relocate.

For the businesses forced to move, Chris Curtin and Ron Bowman, of Curtin/Bowman Enterprises, 1600 Poyntz Ave., have an alternative to the mall that will still provide a downtown location. That alternative is a Service-Commercial Plaza in the 300 block of Colorado Street, where ground breaking took place Sept. 6.

Two separate "condominium-style" buildings, to be built in phases, will be built on both sides of the street, Curtin said.

What I mean by condominium-style is that there will be a condominium-style of ownership," he said. "They will buy their space - kind of like old downtown areas where businesses have common walls."

This "business-condo ownership" is fairly common in metropolitan areas, Curtin said, but it is relatively new for Manhat-

The firm set a goal to lease or sell at least 50 percent of the southern building before construction, Curtin said.

The project's second phase, to be located on the north side of Colorado Street, is designed as a mirror image of the southern building, with angle parking in front of both locations. Curtin said the area should stimulate the downtown environment after redevelopment work is completed there.

Curtin said the same 50 percent lease or sales requirement would apply to the second structure.

"If we're able to ensure lease commitments before construction...our intent is to build them both this year," he said. "We'll be committing the next few weeks to attempting to interest investors." Curtin said with the winter months approaching, people in the downtown area should consider where their businesses will be relocated.

"There will be people forced to relocate that will encounter economic hardships," he said. "But it is in the city's and community's best interest to help these people relocate, to help them to stay on their feet and go forward and grow.

"What we are trying to do is provide a viable, lower-than-market (cost) space for existing businesses downtown to either purchase or rent," Curtin said.

"There is a substantial amount of options. The city acquired land and is selling it to us at an attractive price to hold down costs (for investors). We're doing the same in trying to hold down costs with construction.'

Curtin said there were advantages to the plaza's location, adding the southern, building should be available for occupancy in December.

"What we are in the process of doing in the FIPSE grant is to assist these colleges, all of which are located in the western part of Kansas. This is a critical point, because most of the expertise in the field of gerontology is in the universities. These tend to be in the eastern part of the state," said George Peters, director of the Center for Aging at the University.

'The whole basis of the FIPSE was to transfer expertise by developing the community colleges' resources and geron-tological curricula," Peters said.

The project should indirectly benefit more than 80,000 older people in the seven community colleges' 55-county area by creating greater awareness and sensitivity to their needs and wants, Peters said.

Peters said that although the University was the recipient of the FIPSE and AOA grants, much assistance was received from his colleagues in the Centers for Aging at the University of Kansas, University of Kansas Medical Center, Wichita State University and Washburn University. This cooperation was possible because of a consortium formed by these universities - the Kansas Gerontological Consortium.

"The KGC is comprised of gerontological experts who are the best in the state," Peters

The purpose of the AOA grant is to provide faculty development in the form of graduate level courses and training available to those seven community colleges. Nine to 12 credit hours of graduate level training will be pro-

"Obviously, if you're going to provide good, solid gerontological training, you have to have a good, solid curriculum - we're working at that end. The other side of it is, you also have to have instructors who are trained to deliver that curriculum," Peters

The AOA grant is designed to do that.

A curriculum committee, composed of Peters, the directors for the centers for aging at KU, KU Medical Center, WSU and Washburn University and a representative from each of the community colleges, will meet Nov. 11 in Salina to determine the structure of the AOA program. They will discuss what the courses will be, including the focus and location, Peters said.

Courses offered through the AOA program may begin as early as winter intersession.

Farrell items going to Nichols Hall

By BECKY WEBER Collegian Reporter

A quest for certain materials in Farrell Library may take students to Nichols Hall.

About 200,000 volumes of serials, monographs, documents and archives in Farrell are scheduled to be moved to Nichols.

Moving of these materials and other items was discussed by the Faculty Senate Library Committee at a meeting Wednesday in Farrell.

The purpose of the committee is to review library operations and recommend policies leading to optimum utilization of the library.

Some of the volumes that will be moved beginning Dec. 1 are serial titles not received after 1965 and ceased titles or pre-1960 volumes which began publication after 1965 and ran five years or less.

Monographs to be stored in Nichols include pre-1950 titles for which there are no machine-readable records. The documents to be moved are those currently located in Dickens Hall and all Farrell balcony material. The first copies of dissertations, theses and reports up to 1983 are among the archives that will be moved.

member's failure to be a team player has led to the opening of a position in the Reagan Cabinet.

After a meeting with the president, at her request, Margaret Heckler, secretary of Health and Human Services, was given little choice - either resign from government or pack her bags and become ambassador to Ireland.

Heckler, nor others in the administration should have been surprised by the move, in light of back-stabbing comments from Chief of Staff Donald Regan. Other activities that prompted her meeting request were reports of policy differences between the secretary and her assistants.

Among the strange circumstances surrounding her dismissal is the fact there is no replacement in line for her post.

Also, Heckler did support Reagan's philosophy of a cutback approach to government services. But, and apparently to her misfortune, she was also an early advocate in increasing AIDS research funds. She also opposed reductions in Social Security disability funds. Both stands were in disagreement with the Reagan line.

But even with those opposing

An Associated Press story said "Reagan...apparently was convinced by his Chief of Staff, Donald T. Reagan, and other advisers that Heckler should be moved out of the leadership of the giant bureaucracy," which is the nation's largest with an annual budget of $330 billion.

If the statements of the AP and Speakes are both true, could it be that Reagan does not have the final say in who is a member of the Cabinet, but Donald Regan Realistically, whether the secretary resigned or was fired is a moot point. The result is the same. Heckler will be booted from the Cabinet, will receive a salary reduction of $16,000 and will move to Ireland.

The president should not allow what may be only personality conflicts to decide who is a Cabinet member. He was elected president, and if there is no dissatisfaction, the position should remain Heckler's.

The perfected practice of procrastination

A few days ago, with one tattered end in hand, I noticed I needed a new pair of shoelaces. This was an ordinary situation, one which most would jot down on a list of things to do, take care of at the Mi-T-Mart on the way to a study session, or something equally time conserving.

But not I. Tuesday I spent the entire afternoon making this special purchase. It required visiting three discount stores and two shoe specialty shops, due to my high shoelace standards and the variety of lengths available. The 56-inch laces fit my high-top sneakers adequately, but somehow I felt this unusual need to find the rare 72-inch style.

Why all the bother? I asked myself the same question while lounging at home after this lengthy shopping experience, fondling and admiring the laces, twirling them through my fingers and contemplating installing them later that evening. Then the answer occurred to me. My preoccupation with footwear was all very timely - I had three exams, one quiz and a computer program due the next day.

This type of delay is not a rare event. My procrastination is becoming acutely obvious as time wears on and on and on. Keep in mind this is pure procrastination. I am not unaware of my responsibilities, nor do I merely forget to do things. Rather, much like the plague, I avoid fulfilling personal obligations at all costs.

Students are especially susceptible to the pitfalls of procrastination. The highly personal, unmonitored obligations of the student allow for the subconscious takeover of the mind and body called procrastination. Of course, the fact that watching "Leave It To Beaver" reruns is more enjoyable than cramming for a statistics or accounting exam also adds to the student's vulnerability. Whatever the reason for procrastinating, the detrimental effects it has upon those involved warrants investigation.

The procrastinator's behavior is quite curious. A simple situation such as an exam becomes a complicated, involved task. Consider the situation of Harold, an expert in the art of delay. The situation begins with the week-before announcement of the test date, at which time Harold, in true procrastinator's form, tucks the announcement away with plans of early studying and thorough preparation.

A few days before the exam, he starts planning study time but, of course, other things come up and finally it is the day before the test. But Harold is not worried, for he denies his affliction, convincing himself he has all day to study. This self-deception becomes obvious as his study time is consumed by worthwhile tasks such as organizing his collection of Ratt albums and painstakingly removing road tar from his 10-speed bicycle.

The conclusion of Harold's dilemma is not unusual either. After valiant attempts at stalling, he finally succumbs to responsibility and studies for the exam for one hour very late at night before falling asleep at his desk, which he has just spent two hours organizing.

Also, the procrastinator often has a habit which is quite annoying to those around him. It would not be unusual for Harold to have the audacity to complain to bystanders on the day of the exam that he is much too busy to spend time studying for these tests, or find some other equally unconnected reason for his below-average grade.

Surely Harold doesn't believe that his procrastination goes unnoticed. The situation is easy to diagnose as he has filled every clean sheet of notebook paper in the house with doodling.

Friday, October 4, 1985 - 4

The procrastinator's major tool is the excuse. Excuses, like that of the shoelaces, are very easy to spot. My roommates can smell an approaching due date or exam in the air simply by seeing me washing the dishes or vacuuming the carpet.

Unfortunately, most excuses are not so profitable. Usually the effort at stalling involves activities such as unnecessary napping, scrutinizing library occupants under the guise of "researching" and simple, straightforward daydreaming.

The procrastinator also tends to spend large amounts of time contemplating the duties he must perform. In fact, the time spent thinking about doing something is often a sufficient amount to complete the task.

There are a few basic warning signs of procrastination of which people should be aware. If you find yourself wanting to spend lots of time listening to Madonna on the day before a major assignment is due, you are a prime candidate for this dreadful affliction.

A more serious signal is physiological. Lately I have been experiencing a complete loss of eyesight the minute I open a textbook. The situation worsens if I decide this obstacle to learning can be overcome and is immediately accompanied by severe stomach pains and a quickly spreading rash all over my hands. The remedy is elementary, as my ailments are immediately alleviated upon going out for a "study

Procrastination is certainly a problem to be conquered. A more careful allotment of time and a deepened sense of responsibility are mandatory. But above all, the procrastinator must remember the wonderful, relieved feeling of fulfilling duties ahead of time. I must conclude now, as this column is

Homecoming bias evident

It seems every Homecoming the issue of a greek bias over residence hall arises.

Usually if one looks at both sides of the argument, it's easily seen that the fuss is nothing but a narrowed-down version of the age-old issue of which campus living group has superiority.

But the argument this year seems to have validity. Goodnow Hall didn't receive general information about Homecoming until Sept. 17. Greek houses received their information on Sept. 11, said Clark Atkinson, senior in civil engineering and president of Blue Unfortunately that six-day difference is indicative of something far greater than a simple time delay — it does represent a bias.

That bias is further compounded when Atkinson feels satisfied in making the statement: "It's a shame they feel at a disadvantage since they got their kits only a week later than most greek houses."

One wonders what kind of response a greek house would have if they received their Homecoming information almost see their way to include a week late - or even a day late.

One has to commend the greeks for their participation and excellent organizational skills which play a major part in the excitement generated during Homecoming. But with an equal enthusiasm on the part of the residence halls, Homecoming would be that much more effec-

Blue Key's attempt to involve residence halls in Homecoming activities by having them cosponsor the Spirit March on Thursday night seems futile if similar support is not given in other areas of Homecoming.

How enthusiastic should Goodnow residents feel about participating in a Spirit March after being dejected about past Homecoming activities?

Homecoming involves all K-State students, regardless of living group status. Some groups - such as greeks - need little encouragement to participate. And while it's not necessarily the responsiblity of Blue Key to persuade groups which haven't been active in past Homecomings to participate this year, it should certainly not be their position to dissuade any group which wishes to be involved.

Maybe next year Blue Key can residence halls in all Homecoming events with the same fervor they solicit greeks.

There was a newsprint shortage so the Wednesday's paper. Instead of providing information about Union Day, K-State Day, ambassador elections, bonfire, Homecoming parade and the spirit march through campus, which was designed primarily to increase residence hall involvement with Homecoming, the Collegian staff decided to publicize an oversight on the part of Blue Key. The Goodnow Hall problem was unfortunate, but these other items certainly deserved to be mentioned.

I think the Collegian staff needs to represent and inform the students here rather than representing their advertisers. I hope that this lack of discretion does not in any way hurt the success of Homecoming and the ambassador elections.

United Way pursues student donations

This year marks the first attempt for a campuswide student fund drive for the Riley County United Way.

The fund drive has become a project of the State and Community Affairs Committee of Student Senate, said Pat Bosco, campus fund drive chairman and vice president for educational and student services. The campaign began in July and will end Oct. 11.

In the past, only faculty and staff members were asked to contribute to the campus United Way campaign.

One of the characteristics of the cent increase over last year's contribution of $48,000. The Riley County United Way's goal is $310,698. Bosco said contributions for the United Way will provide operating funds for 16 agencies in Riley County offering services ranging from food by this drive would simply not be able to deliver services to those that need them. There is just no other source of funding.'

A record 161 campus fund drive representatives from faculty, students and staff attended a kick-off luncheon and training session Sept.

"Mortar Board, a senior honorary, is supplying staff assistants to help stuff and address envelopes and doing a lot of the back room kind of things," Bosco said.

The responsibilities of the fund drive representatives include informing people in individual departments, promoting the campaign and finally delivering the collected sealed pledge envelopes to Anderson Hall to Dawn Overholtzer, this year's campaign secretary and secretary for the office of student and educational services.

"Pledges are given in confidence. No one knows whether an employee has contributed or not, or how much unless they choose to have their name published. Any one who contributes anything regardless of the amount and checks that they wish to have their name published, will be published by 'In-View,' the facultystaff newsletter. That's something new this year," Bosco said.

Only one person on campus, Overholtzer, knows the names of contributors and the amounts of contributions to the campus United Way.

"You could consider volunteering your time toward a United Way agency. There are many places where a student can compliment his or her academic major," Bosco said. All of the United Way agencies are listed in the white pages of the telephone book. One of the agencies funded by United Way is the Volunteer Clearing House, 727 Poyntz Ave. The Clearing House is a community service which matches people with agencies in need of volunteers.

Reactor starts after 6 years of dormancy

By The Associated Press

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. - Technicians successfully restarted the undamaged reactor at Three Mile Island Thursday, creating a selfsustaining nuclear reaction for the first time since the plant suffered the nation's worst commercial nuclear accident 61/2 years ago.

"We reached...a chain reaction or the moment of restart," said Lisa Robinson, spokesperson for the plant's operator, GPU Nuclear Corp. "The process went very smoothly. There weren't any problems. We're very pleased."

A U.S. Supreme Court ruling Wednesday cleared the way for operators to restart Unit 1 at the plant, which has been dormant since nuclear fuel partially melted at the Unit 2 reactor, officials said.

In an 80-minute process that began at 4:28 a.m. Thursday, technicians lifted most of the eight sets of control rods out of the reactor, said Doug Bedell, a GPU spokesperson.

At 5:50 a.m., technicians began a slow process of drawing out cooling water laced with boron, a chemical that inhibits the nuclear reaction, and replacing it with pure water. With the control rods out and the boron reduced, neutrons move more freely and hit more atoms, said TMI spokesperson Gordon Tomb. A self-sustaining chain reaction, known as "going critical," was reached shortly before 2 p.m.

"The plant is performing very well. We're very pleased," GPU Nuclear President Philip R. Clark said Thursday. "The instructions to the crew are to proceed deliberately and safely with emphasis on safety.

FBI suspects drugs may link two men killed in accidents

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA - An airplane owner who died in a crash with 15 fellow parachutists was an "acquaintance" of a parachutist who plunged to his death in Tennessee last month while carrying a fortune in cocaine, the FBI said Thursday.

"How well acquainted they were, we do not know at this time," FBI agent Ed Horne said of David L. Williams, 35, of Atlanta, who died in his plane Sunday, and Andrew C. Thornton of Lexington, Ky.

"We can confirm the link between the two, and we are investigating. Where it will lead, we do not know,'

Williams' plane had been grounded two days before the crash because of fuel contamination, and after the crash sugar was found in its fuel, investigators said.

Thornton, 40, fell to his death in Knoxville, Tenn., when his main parachute failed to open and his reserve parachute didn't open properly. A duffel bag loaded with 75 pounds of cocaine, worth about $20 million, was strapped to his waist.

In his pocket was a key bearing the serial number of a plane that crashed the same night 60 miles south of Knoxville, apparently on autopilot and with no one on board.

Shortly after Thornton's death, authorities found a parachute and three duffel bags of cocaine hanging from a tree in Fannin County, Ga., near the Tennessee border.

This week, Butts County, Ga., authorities found a bag containing clothes, maps and and books in a pond near the field where Williams' plane took off before crashing.

"In one of the books, it had the number on the wing, the fuselage, of the plane Thornton supposedly was in written over the diagram of one of the planes," Butts County Sheriff Billy Leverette said Thursday.

Thornton was a member of the Lexington police department for nine years beginning in 1968, got a law degree from the University of Kentucky, then practiced law there until 1982. He was charged in California on drug smuggling conspiracy charges, but pleaded no contest to a misdemeanor drug charge.

Both he and Williams, who also attended the University of Kentucky, jumped with a parachute club there in Lexington, according to a univer-

FBI agent Joe Hardy said his agency was called into the investigation Wednesday by the National Transportation Safety Board.

"They (the NTSB) did not say that was the cause of the crash. It will probably turn out to be that, but we can't say that was the actual cause of the crash right now," Hardy said.

Band to perform free shows preceding every home game

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State Marching Band is giving a free concert one hour before every home football game at Brandeberry Indoor Complex, southwest of the stadium.

The band will play 15 minutes of the music played at that day's pregame and halftime shows, said Stan Finck, assistant professor of music and director of bands. The idea for the concert came from the University of Iowa, Finck said.

"It became a tradition there. There were always at least 200 people at the concerts and afterward they would all parade to the stadium," he said.

Following the concert the band will parade to the stadium and those attending the concert may follow the band to the game, Finck said.

The concert is being held because the band has extra time before the games. "In the past the band sat in the stadium for two wasted hours before the game," Finck said.

The concert and parade to the stadium gives the band a more professional look, Finck said. "I've already had several alumni tell me it's a great idea."

Possible selections include "Wildcat Victory," "Wabash Cannonball," "Trooper Salute," "Home on the Range" and "Strike Up The

Hitchcock horror returns to television

By GARY JOHNSON Collegian Reviewer

The things that go bump in the night have returned to prime time television as part of three new mystery-suspense anthology series "The Twilight Zone," "Amazing Stories" and "Alfred Hitchcock Presents."

Keview

Not too surprisingly, Spielberg's "Amazing Stories" is by far the best show of the bunch. "The Twilight Zone" lumbers along like a dinosaur and confuses paranoia with suspense, as does "Alfred Hitchcock Presents."

The first new "Twilight Zone" episode stars Bruce Willis of "Moonlighting." While making a phone call, he accidentally dials his own apartment. But someone answers. And that someone is himself, or someone that sounds like him. Not a bad beginning, but the question is, where does it go from there? Unfortunately nowhere.

Willis periodically calls home and screams that the person answering can't be himself, but if he had the slightest bit of intelligence he would've gone home and found out what was going on. That could've happened or the show would've been over in just a few minutes. Instead, Willis keeps calling back as he whimpers and cowers. So much for excitement.

The second episode - a remake of an original "Twilight Zone" episode - is a little better, but that's not saying much. An overwrought housewife yearns for a little peace and quiet. While digging in her yard she finds a watch. And not too surprisingly that watch can stop time. Like the first new episode, this one crawls forward while little that's surprising hapmaterial here. The title is vintage But instead of horror, Spielberg '50s comic books, but the show is pure 1985. Instead of paranoia, Spielberg goes for charm, not unlike his episode in "Twilight Zone - The Movie."

Seventy years ago, to avoid running over a small boy who had fallen asleep on the railroad tracks, the Highball Express locked its wheels and crashed, killing everyone aboard. But now it seems a house has been built right where the train went off its tracks. An old man, Old Pa, discovers this once he moves in with his son's family. Old Pa was the little boy and now he claims the train will be coming to pick him up. He says it'll plow right through the living presents his story with loads of wonder and awe. Spielberg's vision isn't pessimistic, nor is it tinged by paranoia. And as a result, the episode is loads of fun.

If this had been a new "Twilight Zone" episode, it would've been played as horror. Old Pa would've had to put his head on the tracks and give his life so the others could live.

The new "Alfred Hitchcock Presents" falls into some of the same traps as the new "Twilight Zone." It uses rape as a gimmick, focusing upon the paranoia of a rape victim. If this is supposed to be fun, it isn't. The episode is well filmed but the filmmakers had their brains on vacation when they came up with the plot.

So after the first week, the retreaded classics aren't running well. Surely they all won't be as bad as the first week indicates, but at the same time they sure don't give much room for hope. The only sure bet for success is Spielberg's "Amazing Stories." And if it continues with the same quality as the first week, it is destined for classic status

Instructor likes work on florals

By TONI OGLESBY Collegian Reporter

He's had a hobby greenhouse since his junior year in high school. He travels to workshops and seminars to learn new techniques and trends, and he enjoys teaching and working with his students.

Kent Kimmins, associate professor of horticulture, emphasized the pleasure he receives from teaching courses in the Retail Floriculture program - a division of the horticulture department.

"I do a lot of teaching. I enjoy teaching. I enjoy working with the students," Kimmins said. "It's fun."

The teaching profession is a tradition in the Kimmins family - his mother and father, as well as his grandfather, were all teachers.

Kimmins teaches three courses and the labs correlating with each. The courses are Basic Floral Design, Advanced Floral Design and Flower

In Basic, Kimmins teaches his students how to make simple arrangements and corsages. The course prepares them for Advanced, in which they create more difficult arrangements and corsages as well as arrangements for weddings and funerals, Kimmins said. He believes the Flower Judging class is important because his students learn how to select the healthiest and best bred flowers - the flowers which make the most beautiful arrangements.

In addition to teaching, Kimmins is also an active sponsor for the Retail Floriculture Club. He coordinates activities for the club, including one or two field trips each semester, seminars and fund-raising projects.

Kimmins sponsors a Christmas workshop each year for club members and his students. At the workshop, they can make arrangements from fresh greens and take them home for their families to enjoy during the holiday season, Kimmins stays informed about new techniques and trends of floral design by attending national and local workshops and seminars. Since they are often held on weekends, it is difficult to arrange for students to go, Kimmins said.

"I try to work these trends into lectures and labs if possible and if the materials are feasible to get," he ex-

"When certain colors or types of flowers are used in furniture, wallpaper, material and the like, flowers must be designed to go with them," Kimmins said. He believes many of the trends that develop in the United States are a combination of designs of other countries and cultures.

"American designs are a melting pot of designs just like Americans are a melting pot of people," Kimmins said. Flower types and designs have been adapted from the Oriental, Victorian arrangements from England - "Our new designs are a blend of designs that are already around."

A new technique Kimmins has begun this year is growing and using typical garden flowers (marigolds, gardenias, zenias) in his labs. In addition to being less costly than traditional arrangement flowers (carnations and roses), his students get the opportunity to make arrangements of flowers people commonly have access to.

Kimmins does all of the decorating for graduation ceremonies in December and in May. There are two locations in December and four or five locations in May he must prepare for. Purple and white are usually used, Kimmins said, but if purple is unavailable, a sunflower theme is used.

"We sometimes have to create sunflowers by spraying the center of mums brown when sunflowers are not available," Kimmins said.

"There's a lot more to floral design than just liking flowers. It takes a good designer to create something from nothing," Kimmins said.

'Cats take 0-4 mark against Oklahoma in Big Eight opener

By TOM PERRIN Staff Writer

How does an 0-4 K-State football team approach a Homecoming matchup with the University of Oklahoma Sooners, the nation's No. 2 team according to The Associated Press?

"I told our players, that even though we lost (against North Texas State University), we're still going to have to compete," interim K-State Coach Lee Moon said. "We're going to have to come out and play as hard as we can and get better.

Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer realizes that his team will be expected to romp over the Wildcats. Switzer also believes, though, that K-State will come into the 11:40 a.m. Big Eight Conference opener Saturday at KSU Stadium ready to play.

"We will be a heavy favorite," Switzer said, "but I guarantee that they will play their best game of the season against us."

K-State's 0-4 start is the worst since 1966 when the 'Cats finished with a 0-9-1 mark under Doug Weaver. This year, K-State has lost consecutive games at home to Wichita State University, the University of Northern Iowa, Texas Christian University and North Texas State University.

While offensive point production has been a problem for K-State (the average is 12 points a game), the defense has played well and is ranked 14th in the nation in fewest yards

K-State also has the best turnover ratio in the Big Eight. Last week against North Texas State, the Wildcat defense forced two fumbles and came up with two interceptions.

"Defensively (against North Texas), I thought we played aggressively. We made the plays and gave our offense the ball on several occasions," Moon said.

While Oklahoma was able to manage only a 13-7 win in its opener last week at the University of Minnesota, the Sooners have the most touted offensive team that K-State has faced so far. For years, the Sooners' wishbone offense has been one of the most feared in the nation.

Switzer mainly is concerned with two things - Oklahoma's lack of production last week on offense and having to use a number of underclassmen on offense, including sophomore quarterback Troy

"We are a long way from being a good ball club on offense," Switzer said. "I think the talent is there, but the experience isn't.

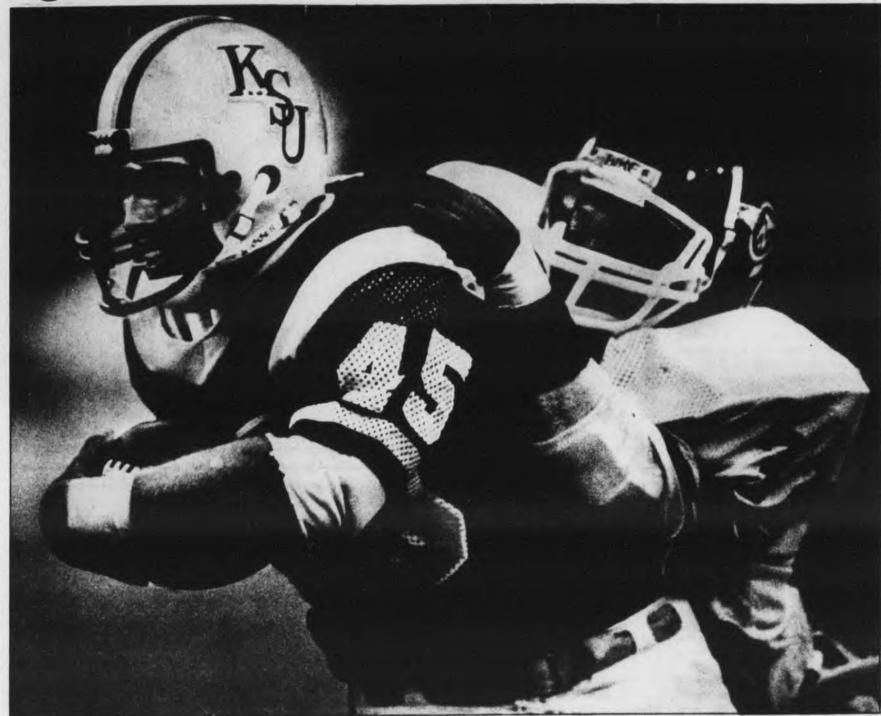

"We need to continue to improve. We are playing with so much youth Injuries also have concerned Switzer. The Sooners will be missing halfback Spencer Tillman, who carried the ball for 73 yards on eight carries against Minnesota before suffering a pulled hamstring that will keep him out of the lineup up to three weeks. Another member of Oklahoma's starting backfield, fullback Earl Johnson, suffered a knee injury against Minnesota that will sideline him for the rest of the K-State has an injury problem as well. The Wildcats' top two centers, Elmer Schmitz and Charles Sander, both suffered knee injuries last Saturday against North Texas State. Schmitz is out for the year, while Sander is questionable for Saturday's game.

Oklahoma's defense is among the best in the nation. Led by Outland Trophy candidate Tony Casillas at noseguard, the Sooners held Minnesota without a first down in the first half of last week's game and allowed just one late fourth quarter touchdown.

K-State's offense has been unproductive so far this season and showed no signs of reviving last week against North Texas State.

K-State tight end John Stonner is caught from behind by North Texas State Eagles. The 'Cats will open the Big Eight Conference season against the defensive back Jerry Pickens during the Wildcats loss last week to the

OU, KU first conference foes for K-State volleyball team

By CLAUDIA SANGSTER

Collegian Reporter K-State's volleyball team opens Big Eight Conference action tonight against the University of Oklahoma Sooners at 7:30 in Ahearn Field

The Wildcats are looking to break the Sooners' four-game winning streak over the 'Cats. K-State last defeated Oklahoma in 1983.

K-State enters the contest with a 7-4 record, but three losses have been against top-20 teams. Oklahoma brings a 10-8 record to Ahearn.

The Sooners are led by senior Sharon Kuchan and freshman Debbie Carlson. Kuchan currently ranks sixth in the Big Eight in service aces and Carlson is ninth in the conference in hitting.

"The characteristics of Oklahoma are that they are strong and tall," K-State Coach Scott Nelson said. "They run a powerful offense. They are strong blockers and a strong serving team.'

In order for the Wildcats to be successful against the Sooners, Nelson said, they will have to concentrate on

"It is going to be a matchup of contrasting styles," he said. "I anticipate OU to run a slower-paced offense and we will use our quickness against them. It will dictate who will control the serving and passing in our match.'

The volleyball action continues Saturday night when the Wildcats play host to intrastate rival University of Kansas at 7:30.

"We really don't know much about them." Nelson said of the Jayhawks. "Traditionally, they have been a team of ball control. They are an excellent defensive team. They don't make many mistakes and they keep the ball coming back at you.'

The Jayhawks hold a 7-4 record under the direction of first-year head coach Frankie Albitz. She comes to Lawrence after previously coaching at Oral Roberts University.

The Wildcats, Nelson said, will have to serve aggressively against KU and make the Jayhawks more predictable.

"We want to use our power and keep the pressure on them," he said. The contests with OU and KU look Wildcats hope to establish themselves in the Big Eight.

"These two matches are real critical for us," Nelson said. "The Big Eight matches are the only thing relevant now. This is the heart of our schedule. How we do determines our role in the Big Eight tournament and also the national tournament."

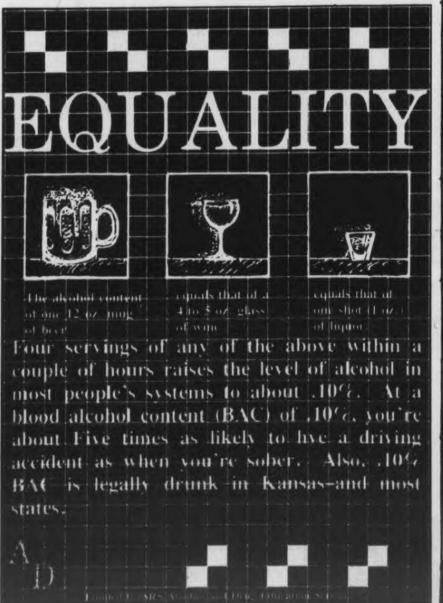

Going into tonight's contest, K-State has a number of players among the leaders in conference statistics.

As a team, K-State is second in hitting efficiency. They have connected on 546 of 1,423 kill attempts. The Wildcats also rank second in blocking with a 6.19 average in 42 games.

Senior co-captain Renee Whitney and junior Helen Bundy rank among the top 10 in hitting efficiency. Whitney is leading the Big Eight in that category with 37 of 80 kill attempts. Bundy has connected on 85 of 189 attempts.

Donna Lee, the other senior cocaptain, is leading the conference in kills per game. She has 140 kills in 39

Tarvestad helps 'Cats gain split

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's softball team split a pair of games Thursday against Cowley County Community College at the K-State softball field, losing the first game 8-6 in 10 innings but coming back to win the nightcap,

In the first game, both teams were tied at 3 after the regulation seven innings. Cowley County scored a run in the top of the eighth and ninth innings only to have the 'Cats counter with single runs of their own.

Finally in the 10th, Cowley County came up with three runs to take an 8-5 lead. K-State was able to add just one run in the bottom of the inn-

Totals for the first game had Cowley County with eight runs on seven hits and two errors, while the 'Cats scored their six runs on seven hits and three errors. The leading hitter for K-State was Chris Haller, who went 3-for-5 with one RBI.

K-State pitcher Lisa Tarvestad shut down the Cowley County bats in the second game on just one hit. K-State scored two runs in the second inning to provide Tarvestad with all the cushion she needed.

K-State third baseman Jill Kennedy reaches for the ball as Cowley County Community College left fielder Shanon Davis slides head first into third.

Davis was safe on third and CCCC went on to win the first game, 8-6. The 'Cats came back to win the second game, 3-0.

Mets fall 4-3; Cards' lead now 2 games

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS - Vince Coleman had three hits, including a two-run single in the fourth inning, and the St. Louis Cardinals averted a three-game sweep by New York with a 4-3 victory Thursday night that restored their lead in the National League East to two games over the Mets.

With the victory, the Cardinals ended a three-game losing streak and reduced their magic number to two. Any combination of two Cardinals victories or Mets losses would clinch the division.

The Cardinals finish the season with three games at home against Chicago, sending Bob Forsch against Dennis Eckersley tonight. The Mets play three at home with Montreal, with Sid Fernandez going against the Expos' Bill Gullickson in the opener.

If the two teams finish the season in a tie, a one-game playoff in New York Monday will decide the division winner.

The Cardinals came into the threegame series leading New York by three games, but the Mets pulled within a game with a 1-0, 11-inning victory Tuesday night and a 5-2 decision Wednesday night.

The two teams were tied 1-1 in the fourth inning when Coleman drove in a pair of runs with his second hit of the night off Rick Aguilera, 10-7.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The Kansas City Royals, taking three out of four in their showdown series with the California Angels, are now in position to win their sixth American League West crown in 10 years.

"Now our destiny is in our own hands," said Steve Balboni, who slugged one of the three home runs Thursday night to carry the Royals to a 4-1 victory over the Angels.

"We don't have to depend on anybody to do anything for us," Balboni said. "We will live or die by what we do ourselves."

games for a 3.58 average.

Sophomore Mary Kinsey also ranks among the Big Eight leaders in kills per game. She is in fourth place with a 3.12 average. In her 41 games of competition she has had 128 kills.

In serving aces, K-State has three players among the top 10. Whitney is third with a .571 average, Kinsey places with a .463 average and Lee also earns a spot at .461.

Bundy is currently leading the conference in blocking. She has 17 solo blocks and has assisted on 46 blocks, for a 1.90 average.

"Helen is playing at a much higher level then in the past two years,' Nelson said. "She is working hard and showing leadership."

Many individuals are contributing to the current success of K-State, but Nelson sees the success coming from the strength of the whole team.

"Everyone at different times has been contributing to our wins," he said. "We are a strong unit. We are starting to get production out of seven, eight or nine people who enter a match and a lot of those people are freshmen."

Prior to the start of the conference season, K-State played against top competition in the nation to prepare them for the Big Eight schedule.

"In our regular season we played against some stiff competition," Nelson said. "It was good for us because we could measure ourselves in the areas we need to improve and compare ourselves to some of the top teams in the country and nation."

Some of the teams that Nelson refers to include 12th-rated Colorado State University and 20th-rated University of Wyoming. K-State lost to Wyoming in three games by the scores of 15-13, 15-13 and 16-14.

"The first thing that the Wyoming coach said to me following the game was that the match could have gone either way," Nelson said.

The group's project was not chosen to be shown in Venice for several reasons. The architects were limited on the information about the area and because of the distance and they were unable to visit the site, he said.

"We were dealing with a really historical area," Husseini said. "We eliminated buildings to open up more space. They ended up to be very valuable buildings."

Blast injures 11 in Wamego home

From staff and wire reports

WAMEGO - A violent explosion jarred a west Wamego home from its foundation early Sunday and left injured as many as 11 people attending a party at the house, including one man critically, authorities

Agents from the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms were called to the town about 12 miles east of Manhattan and an Army explosives detachment unit from Fort Riley was summoned to examine a "highly volatile substance" found in the house, said Wamego police dispatcher Norman Spain.

Spain did not identify the explosive material. However, Pottawatomie County Sheriff's Investigator Gerald Schmidt said fireworks might have been involved in setting off the larger explosion.

"The front door was blown out of the door jam and the door jam was blown off. The windows were blown out of the house of course and there was no plaster left on the walls," Spain said.

Spain also said debris from the residence was scattered across the street.

Authorities cordoned off the house and set up a one-half block barricade but had not evacuated any of the neighboring houses early Sunday.

According to Schmidt, at least five people had to be hospitalized following the blast, which occured shortly after 4 a.m. He said many of the injured suffered broken ear drums or ear damage.

One of those hospitalized, Charles Lowrey, 24, of Wamego, had to have both arms amputated from the elbows down and was treated for burns to the head and face, authorities said. He was listed in critical condition Sunday evening at the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City,

New ambassadors focus on recruitment issue

By JANE KRIEGER Collegian Reporter

Lori Shellenberger, sophomore in history, political science and modern languages, and Terry Hallauer, junior in marketing, were chosen as University ambassadors during halftime of the K-State-University of Oklahoma football game Saturday.

Shellenberger and Hallauer won the student vote during the elections held Wednesday through Friday.

Both Shellenberger and Hallauer received a $1,000 scholarship and the opportunity to represent the University by traveling throughout the state to promote the University's goals and programs through speaking and other engagements.

"So many opportunities are all of the sudden open to us because I see it as the chance to express myself and a chance to represent our University, and to get out and develop personal skills that will be invaluable in life," Hallauer said.

Both candidates said their first reaction to the announcement was relief.

"I was so nervous when I was standing out there. It helped me because we (members of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority) won homecoming. They announced that right before we walked out on the field and I was thinking about that so I relaxed a bit. I was glad when he said it (announced ambassador winners).

It took him so long," Shellenberger said.
"I felt relieved," Hallauer said. "There were three good candidates, and whether I won or not it came down to the point where I would be happy either way." Shellenberger and Hallauer will recruit potential students through career counseling in high schools. However, their main work occurs during second semester.

"I hope to get potential students more aware of what the University has to offer develop an excitement for the University," Hallauer said.

"Right now the (University) programs offered seem to rise and fall with the football season," Hallauer said. "If the football team is doing well the students get excited. When

Senate rejects vote to stop budget talks

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Despite a last-minute plea from President Reagan, the Senate refused Sunday to choke off debate on a proposal mandating a balanced budget by 1991 and left in doubt urgently needed legislation to continue the government's borrowing authority.

The Senate voted 57-38 for the so-called cloture motion to limit debate on the amendment, but it was seven votes short of the necessary two-thirds and that further action on increasing the national debt limit remain-

The meaning of the tally was muddled because it did demonstrate a strong majority backed the pending budget plan.

After the vote, it was unclear when a debt limit increase could be considered, although another vote to shut off debate was scheduled

At the White House, spokesperson Albert R. Brashear said he could not say what specific problems would be caused by failure to enact the debt limit measure.

"Zero hour is approaching," Reagan said in a statement issued from his weekend Maryland retreat at Camp David just hours before the Senate convened Sunday afternoon. "By tomorrow (today), the federal government's cash balances will be virtually exhausted and we will be facing a financial emergency.'

Debate on the balanced budget plan offered by Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., has held up legislation increasing the national debt limit, which Treasury Department officials have said must be done by today to avoid disruptions of government financial operations.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., told his colleagues that some senators "don't want to cut spending. ...Some don't want to do anything unless it's raise your taxes and dismantle defense."

Nonetheless, he fell short of the necessary majority

Since a change in Senate rules is involved, it would take a two-thirds majority of those voting instead of the usual 60 for a so-called cloture motion.

But Dole had said that even if he got a simple majority, "Then I think the burden's on those holding us up.'

Democrats and Republicans alike have agreed that passage of some sort of balanced budget legislation is likely and would be wor-

Egypt suspect in treaty violation

Israel questioning death of 7

By The Associated Press

JERUSALEM - Israel raised doubts Sunday about Egypt's claim that it was a demented policeman who shot to death seven Israeli vacationers along the Sinai coast. Officials said the gunman may have been an Egyptian soldier, whose presence in the area would violate the 1979 peace treaty.

Egypt said a crazed policeman fired on a group of tourists and on his own unit Saturday at Ras Bourka, a coral-lined beach 27 miles south of the border checkpoint of Taba. One Egyptian reportedly was killed before the gunman was captured.

"We know he (the gunman) was a soldier. We have known for some time they have had soldiers in the area," said an Israeli government official, speaking on condition of anonymity. He also said Israel was checking reports that a machine gun was used.

Acting Foreign Minister Moshe Arens said Israel was investigating whether Egypt had stationed army troops on the Gulf of Aqaba coast in violation of the peace treaty, which allows Egypt to station only police with sidearms in the coastal region. A senior Egyptian official in Cairo denied the gunman was a soldier and said he would be court-martialed by the General Security Police Force.

Israeli Health Minister Mordechai Gur said witnesses reported that the gunfire came from different directions, but cautioned that the reports might be unreliable.

Other officials said autopsies were being conducted to determine if more than one weapon was used.

In Cairo, President Hosni Mubarak called the shootings a "small accident" that was the work of a man "who lost his mind" and sent condolences to Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres.

Israel sent Egypt a sharply worded demand for a reply within 48 hours about possible treaty violations, progress in the inquiry and an explanation as to why the victims were denied prompt medical attention, the Foreign Ministry said.

CC sets construction date

By TOM SCHULTES Manhattan Editor

Groundbreaking ceremonies for an administrative-classroom building at Manhattan Christian College have been scheduled for 6 p.m. Oct. 14.

The new building, to house all administrative and faculty offices along with classroom space for up to 545 students, is the first construction project in an $8 million renovation project for the MCC campus.

MCC President Kenneth Cable said the ceremony will take place in the 1400 block of Anderson Avenue.

The facility, being constructed by

Floyd Sack, of Empire Development, Denver, is being given to the college by two donors. Another project scheduled to begin construction soon is a new Student Service Center to be located along North 16th Street, between Laramie Street and Anderson Avenue. The facility is to include 12 one-bedroom service center in a single structure. Sack and MCC were granted a rezoning for the Center Aug. 20 following a series of public hearings before both the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board and Manhattan

City Commission.

During the hearings, Sack and MCC officials said the long-range goal of the renovation is to improve physical facilities to attract students for an increase in enrollment, thus providing financial stability to the college. School officials also said Sack's purchase of the land for approximately $680,000 would help raise "much needed cash" to meet demands by creditors for payments on outstanding debts. The need for financial stability was

The awards were presented by Clark Atkinson, president of Blue Key and senior in chemical engineering, and Ron Wineinger, vice president of Blue Key and senior in agricultural economics.

Residence halls and living groups participated in events such as float decoration, spirit banners, Yell Like Hell and Body Building from Thursday through Saturday. The overall spirit scores were based on the total points from all competitions in which each group participated.

Putnam won the overall residence hall spirit competition with 135 points.

Youths battle police in London riot

LONDON - More than 500 youths battled police in fierce street fighting Sunday night in north London. Officials said one policeman was stabbed to death and another officer wounded by a shotgun blast was among 28 people injured.

It was the first police fatality and the first gunfire reported in the riots that hit the south London district of Brixton last weekend and the industrial cities of Liverpool and Birmingham last month.

Clive Appleby, administrator of North Middlesex Hospital, said a policeman died shortly after being admitted with a stab wound in the

Scotland Yard said at least six policemen were injured during the rioting in the Tottenham district, including one with a shotgun wound in the stomach. Press Association, Britain's domestic news agency, reported earlier that three policemen were shot, but police did not confirm that. The agency said one policeman was seen being dragged away unconscious, and it quoted another officer as saying, "They are now using shotguns." The trouble began a day after a black woman died while police were searching her home. Police said the woman apparently suffered a heart attack, but her family disputed that. About 200 youths, most of whom were blacks and some wearing masks, hurled bottles and stones at the Tottenham police station Sunday afternoon, and then sat in the street. They blocked traffic for about an hour before dispersing, and no one was injured.

Soviets told to end Lebanon's war

BEIRUT, Lebanon — A caller saying he represented the extremist group holding three Soviet Embassy personnel hostage said Sunday they would not be freed until the Soviet Union and America end Lebanon's 10-year-old civil war.

The anonymous caller told a Western news agency that the group holding the Soviets, the Islamic Liberation Organization, also appealed to another terrorist organization not to free the American and French hostages that it kidnapped.

Guerrillas of the Islamic Liberation Organization, a Moslem fundamentalist group, kidnapped three Soviet diplomats and a Soviet Embassy doctor on Monday and the body of one, Cultural Attache Arcady Katkov, was found Wednesday in a West Beirut suburb. He had been shot in the head.

In its initial report of the abductions, the Islamic Liberation Organization threated to kill all four Soviet hostages unless Syrianbacked militias halted their offensive against the Moslem fundamentalist Tawheed militia in the northern port city of Tripoli.

Union members approve extension

OKLAHOMA CITY — Union employees of Wilson Foods Corp. on Sunday approved an indefinite contract extension proposed by the United Food and Commercial Workers Union.

UFCW local president Emmett McClendon Jr. said the vote was 70 percent in favor of the extension with the Oklahoma City-based meat packer.

"This was pretty much the way we thought it would go," McClen-

The union's bargaining committee tentatively had approved the extension last week. Union officials said the extension was necessary to protect jobs if Wilson Foods was sold. Wilson officials have said they are interested in selling the firm as one way to raise capital.

The union has 3,000 members, including 400 in Oklahoma City. Union spokesman Zack Allen in Washington, D.C., said the extension is designed to prevent a strike, which might lower Wilson's asking price. He said the extension also would make the food chain more attractive to potential buyers.

If union members had rejected the extension, they would have had to determine a strike date. A possible buyer is Nebraska-based IBP Inc., which failed in an unfriendly takeover attempt of Wilson in early 1984. IBP officials say that they have been invited to review Wilson for possible purchase.

BELLEVILLE — Sherri Howard, a high school senior from Sedgwick County, has been named 1986 Kansas Junior Miss.

A ceremony that featured 30 high school seniors competing for more than $8,000 in cash scholarships and awards was held Saturday night in this north-central Kansas town.

Howard, who attends Southeast High in Wichita, will represent Kansas during the national Junior Miss pageant in Mobile, Ala., in June, said Gladys Hobelmann, a pageant official. Pageant officials originally reported incorrectly that Howard was a student at Wichita's Basehor High.

First runner-up was Smith County Junior Miss Tamara Grothaus and the second runner-up was Ottawa County Junior Miss Tanya Davidson. Grothaus is from Smith Center and Davidson is from

Officials release economic report

SEOUL, South Korea - This year's economic prospects are gloomier than earlier expected for both rich and developing countries, said an International Monetary Fund report released Sunday. But American officials predicted a bright economic future.

The report was released as the fund's policy-making body met Sunday in preparation for this week's big IMF-World Bank meeting in Seoul, which is expected to lead to the formation of a new agency designed to steer more investment to the Third World.

"There have been increasing signs of hesitancy in the pace of world economic expansion in the first half of 1985," the IMF "World Economic Outlook" said.

The report said U.S. gross national product increased at an annual rate of only 1 percent a year in the first half of 1985 while growth in other industrial countries was "generally subdued." Also, poor countries were hit by a sharp fall in the price of raw materials, harming their ability to pay off their huge debt burden and reducing their buying power. The fund now expects a growth of the world economy of only 3.1 percent this year, instead of the 3.4 percent it predicted in April. The IMF still thinks the rate will be back up to 3.5 percent next year, still much less than the 4.5 percent last year. Members of the IMF's 22-member policy-making Interim Committee met behind closed doors Sunday, but in statements distributed to reporters it was clear that richer and poorer countries differed considerably in appraising the economic state of the world.

Review of agent's death continues

PHOENIX, Ariz. - As authorities on Sunday continued to investigate the shooting of the first woman FBI agent to die on duty, the FBI declined comment on a city police report that she was mistakenly shot by two fellow agents.

FBI agent Herb Hawkins said his office planned to release information later about the death Saturday of Special Agent Robin L. Ahrens, 33. She was shot in the hand, arm and eye late Friday as about a dozen FBI agents arrested a robbery suspect at an apartment complex. Police Chief Ruben Ortega said Ahrens was shot by two agents who mistook her for the robbery suspect's girlfriend.

FBI spokesman Jack Smythe said Saturday he "cannot comment and will not" comment on whether Ahrens was shot by other agents until an investigation was completed.

A statement released by Hawkins on Sunday morning said the FBI investigation was continuing, and police Sgt. Tony Kruczynski said a city investigation also was under way.

'No excuse' for missing church

OKLAHOMA CITY - A Baptist minister, tired of preaching to the converted and getting excuses from the rest of his congregation for not showing up in church, decided to bring in a packed house by answering those excuses head on.

For folks who would rather be where "the fish are bitin" "than contemplate the wages of sin, the Rev. Gene Garrison planned to stock a fountain at the First Baptist Church of Oklahoma City with fish, and hand out rods and reels.

For those who sleep through services, there were cots. Pews were reserved in the front of the sanctuary for those who complain they can't hear the sermon, and in the back for people who complain that the preaching is too loud.

"It's 'No Excuse Sunday' here," Garrison said. "For all the excuses we could think of - about 15 - we have answers. When our church members enter the doors they can take their pick."

"We'll have two doctors for people who feel too ill to come," the minister said. "We'll have steel helmets for people who are scared the roof is falling in." And for those for whom the dinner bell rings precisely at noon,

Garrison has frozen dinners ready.

The subject of the minister's sermon? The evils of using excuses to miss church services.

Subtle biases toward women inhibit careers, speaker says

By CLAUDIA SANGSTER Collegian Reporter

A subtle bias exists in the organizations of American society which are geared toward women and their career objectives, said Dori Lambert, counselor in the Counseling Center, during Friday's Focus on

"Organizational Structure and Personality Implications for the Working Woman" was the topic of Lambert's talk, derived from information she and colleague Chris Hutchins completed at the University of Nebraska.

The two based their paper on the works of four specialists in the field of personality structure - Donald Super, John Holland, Chris Argyris and Rosabeth Moss Canter.

"Super's studies have been based on career decision making," Lambert said. "He believes that a person's decision reflects their selfconcept."

He also bases his concepts on vocational maturity, which has three levels, she said. The first is the level or ability of independence, the second is the setting of goals and the final level is acting on the goals.

"The aspect of vocational maturity is often geared toward the male objective. Sometimes women don't have a chance to become vocationally mature," Lambert said.

Lambert and Hutchins found in their research that you can't describe women as being vocationally mature by Super's definition.

Women have become more aware of careers due to educational, legal and social changes," Lambert said. "Women are becoming more vocationally mature."

Holland suggests that interests are reflected in one's personality. He believes that there are six personality types: realistic, investigative, artistic, social, enterprising and conventional.

"A person can be one of these personality types and most people will want to be in an environment where these personalities can exist,"

Lambert said. Argyris was chosen for research because of the interest in organizations and personalities.

"Argyris states that an organization can start at an immature level and then develop into a mature organization," Lambert said. "A person's personality is affected if they work in an immature organization and they should be in a mature organization."

Canter has completed a study on men and women in organizations which said in order to increase the opportunities for women, there needs to be decentralized power, open channels of communication and

Because of the bias that exists in organizations in society, Lambert believes there are three barriers that need to be bypassed to break down the bias.

"If a person is unsure of a career, than I suggest taking the Strong-Campbell test," Lambert said. "The test does show where your interests lie, but it has been found to be very biased. It tends to put women in more traditional roles than non-traditional." The second barrier-breaking step is to understand an organization's structure and personality. 'Get an idea of how people react. Ask for an organizational chart and get an idea of where you, as a woman, would fit in. And if you really want to get an idea of how things work, talk to the secretaries. They know how everything operates and how things run," Lambert said.

As executive secretary for the past three months, Wineinger coordinates activities of six FFA state officers, oversees the publication of two magazines and coordinates conferences, workshops and conventions. He also responds to reFarmers and Young Farm Women award programs.

Cut loans now — or later

Committees in the House and the Senate have recently approved bills cutting $810 million and $1 billion respectively from the Guaranteed Student Loan program during the next three years. The Senate and House committees will be responsible for reaching a compromise on the two bills. The deadline for public comment is Nov. 4.

In September, the House Education and Labor Committee passed a bill that would eliminate or reduce loans to about 650,000 students by requiring all to prove their need before receiving a loan.

A bill passed by the Senate education subcommittee would reduce the federal subsidy given to lending institutions making student loans. It would also require that loans be distributed in increments, with interest allowances only paid on the amount distributed. These two provisions may force as many as 3,000 of 11,000 lenders to discontinue student loan programs because they will not be profitable enough.

The Education Department has endorsed the Senate committee's proposed changes designed to reduce defaults and general misuses. Under the new rules, a student would be required to prove not only enrollment, but attendance in class as well.

Also proposed is a requirement that loan checks be made jointly payable to the student and the university. Included is a provision which would deny further loans to students who have defaulted on a loan.

The bills are designed to protect a program which has enabled many students to earn a degree who otherwise may not have been able to. The provisions should not be misinterpreted as being "anti-student," but as a means to ensure fiscal responsibility.

However, Congress cannot expect to control a student's class attendance, or monitor it with the instructor's assistance. Nor should it attempt to charge a university with the responsibilty of monitoring how a student spends his loan. These provisions will only add frustration and bureaucracy to an already confusing program.

Rather, the emphasis in the new bill should be placed on ensuring that only students who qualify with documented financial need are awarded student

Telling truth better than upholding image

Are you a legend in your own mind?

Do other people see what we intend them to see? Is the image we strive to project the picture that comes across? I may have on a raw silk suit and a T-shirt, and I might even drive a Ferrari and have a pet alligator named "Elvis," but Don Johnson I ain't, and I'll never work for Miami Vice. Yet we spend a great deal of time pretending to ourselves we are someone we aren't. When you are a kid it's fine to playact and pretend you're the Secret Agent Man or Batman (and toymakers feed these fantasies with millions of dollars worth of toys every year.) But to be an adult - at least in name and whisper to yourself that you're Christie Brinkley-Joel or Tom Selleck - and to believe it - seems a dangerous fantasy.

Perhaps we don't do it consciously. But when we imitate heroes by wearing the clothes they wear or walking and talking the way they walk and talk, we are suppressing real identities in favor of fictional ones.

I have a great time just watching people walk on campus, while I sit on a bench, or drive through campus on an endless search for a parking place. I see people desperately trying to show total strangers they are something even total strangers can see they aren't. What comes across is not the image we want to send, but rather the impression that we are trying way too hard.

As I drive through crowded campus streets, I never fail to be amazed at the girls who sneak a peek at guys walking past them, then quickly look the other way as if the object of their attentions wasn't nearly good enough for them. It's as though they believed they had just a wee bit more right to the sidewalk than the average peon on the street. I laugh, and I think to myself "Yes, you might be cute...but you're not THAT cute,

I see guys who let their jaws droop and their eyes bug when chesty girls jog by.

RICH HARRIS Collegian Columnist

These are the same desperate geeks who count a peek down a shirt as a good day.

Guys who swagger around Aggieville on Friday afternoons and waggle their butts, wolf whistle at women and then turn to the five or six other guys with them and laugh are fooling no one except perhaps themselves. It's no wonder they're turning to a bunch of other guys for laughter - no selfrespecting woman would have anything to do

Women who layer on makeup like it was going out of style and they had better get all they ever planned to use on in one sitting don't help their looks any in my opinion. Makeup used to hide, rather than accent, what's underneath isn't doing anyone any

The point here is not that a lot of people make fools of themselves pretending they aren't what they are - they do, but it goes further than that. The fact that people aren't satisfied to be what they are indicates they may not like what they are, and that is cause for real concern.

When people dislike themselves, as I did for so long, they are unable to operate in the real world. It is fundamentally impossible to dislike yourself and happily be yourself. One must adopt a personality that eases the transition from what we want to what is, and that means faking it.

I was a great actor in high school, loved the stage, even won awards for my performances. But very seldom was I really happy, and never was I satisfied with who and what I was. That is why I took to acting like I did...it was a chance to be someone else for a few shining moments, to break out.

But, of course, that's hardly a healthy mental attitude. It has taken a very long time, and I have been through a kind of personal hell, but I am finally starting to like myself a little more and I am finding a little more equanimity in the face of unpleasant discoveries about myself...and about others.

When I was down on myself, I never thought too much of other people either. Believe me, there are a lot of contemptible things out there. And it's a lot easier to feel contempt for other people than to dig for that kernel of decency.

Hey, look - I'm no Pollyanna, seeing good where ever I turn. This old world stinks sometimes, folks, and at times it seems there are more rotten things than good. But what are you going to do about it? Pack it in? Where's the sense in that?

You've got two choices: live with it, or kill yourself. And if you're going to live you may as well live happily.

Accept yourself for what you are, which is a lot easier said than done, I know. But it can be done. If I can do it, anyone can.

Lighten up. There is nothing much that can be done about the way the world operates. We take what we are given and make of it what we will. There are a lot of ways to approach the problem of self-realization, most of them bad. I don't offer any pat answers. The solution is what works best for you, but I strongly suggest that pretending, playing mind games and acting are not the best

There's no fooling your heart. Even if you manage to fool people, and impress them, any relationship you build on that impression will fail. Truth is a prerequisite.

FONE to train volunteers

When your roommate gets on your nerves, you get that test you studied all night for back with a big red "F" scratched at the top, or your parents just don't understand why you got your hair dyed red with a streak of yellow, there is someone you can talk to.

For 15 years students with problems stemming from scholastic, personal or social difficulties have called FONE, a crisis line for people who need someone to talk to about their problems.

This week has been proclaimed Community Awareness Week by the FONE Crisis Center, operating out of the University For Man, 1221 Thurston St.

FONE is an anonymous and confidential listening and referral service financially supported in part by student fees. FONE has served more than 3,500 callers in the last year alone.

Some 90 calls were suicide related.

A volunteer with FONE said the suicide calls range from two to six hours. She said most who call FONE feel lonely or depress-

FONE needs 50 people per week to operate according to their full schedule. Only 40 volunteers are currently working. The qualifications to be a FONE crisis line worker are few.

"It takes caring, dedication, willingness to work and the training," said one volunteer.

People working for the FONE range in age from 18 to the mid-50s, but everyone is welcome to become a volunteer, the volunteer said.

While the service is beneficial to those who need to talk or have a problem, others must be willing to spend time as volunteers. FONE is a great service to the community and University because it is open during the times that most other services

There are students who need someone to talk to and without the human element, FONE is a dead line. For those who feel suicidal, a dead line could be the last thing they need to hear.

Responsibility for sexual activities needed

American society is afraid of sexuality.

While this may seem a strange thing to say about a country that uses sex to sell everything from Pepsi to dishwashers, it is even stranger that this country consistently fails to link this sexuality to its consequences. This myopia is not limited to any one segment of the society or any particular ideological background.

Take, for instance, birth control. Somehow it is too controversial for the major television stations to run contraceptive commercials during times other commercials are displaying the desirability of sexual relations. On the other hand, people seem to think that taking the time to prevent pregnancy somehow destroys the intimacy of the occasion. Never mind that a pregnancy scare would definitely demolish intimacy for some time to come.

So both the supposedly "moral" people trying to outlaw contraceptives and the supposedly "immoral" people having sex fail to realize some basic truths. First of all, sex will occur whether or not contraceptives are available. Thus, to avoid unwanted pregnancies and abortions (whether legal or illegal) the best thing to do would be not only to keep birth control legal, but also widely available and encouraged. Those having sex should also wake up and take advantage of contraceptives and remove the stigma associated with their use. Responsibility is the key word in this context. It's amazing that a mother can write to advice columnist Ann Landers about her teenage daughter's use of birth control and not notice the daughter's responsibility and wisdom.

Another assumption that must be rejected is that all married couples want children or eventually will. It is automatically assumed in some quarters that babies are viewed as the most delightful thing that could happen to a couple. Those not adopting this concept are seen as antisocial to outright sticks-in-the-

DANIEL GRUBB Collegian Columnist

And if a married couple does have a contraceptive failure, to give the child up for adoption is seen as the most heinous crime ever. Needless to say, I find this whole mind-

Next, we have the persistent homophobia this culture exudes. Homosexuals are denied many of the basic rights granted to so-called "normal people." For example, gays can lose their jobs and are restrained from such activities as teaching. They are consistently refused the right to show affection to their friends in a way that would be allowed if the people involved were of different sexes.

Lately, of course, many homophobic ideas have been accentuated by the disease called AIDS. There is no question that this is a very dangerous disease, as is every illness with such a large mortality rate. But the Rev. Jerry Falwell's statement that AIDS is God's revenge against homosexuals is the height of superstitious bigotry. It is this type of thinking that spread the plague through Europe when everyone congregated in the churches. Luckily for Jerry, AIDS isn't communicable in the same man-

This reaction to AIDS has understandably led to a lot of paranoia among homosexuals. Whether this has increased or decreased their responsibility, I have no power to say. Hopefully though, responsible discussion and actions will become more prevalent on both sides of this emotional issue.

But, of course, AIDS is only one of a variety of sexually transmitted diseases, and one that so far has affected a disapproved-of minority. This, along with its lethality, has made it an easy scapegoat.

Other sexually transmitted diseases are in existence and are much more of an immediate health threat than AIDS is. Responsibility is needed also among heterosexual couples to prevent the spread of herpes, as well as other, more treatable afflictions. To harp on homosexuals and not pay attention to these other diseases seems to be shading the truth at best.

Another area where we need much more progress is in dealing with rape. While it is being realized that not everyone wants sex all the time, we still have to address the basic reasons that rape occurs. It is important to realize that it is not only a sexual crime but also, and more importantly, a crime of violence against women and men.

We must stop programming men to think that demanding sex is a masculine rather than a cowardly thing to do. We must also start teaching women how to defend themselves and how to live through the trauma afterward. In short, as a society we have to stop condoning rape.

We have to start dealing in a reasonable manner with our sexuality. From birth control to rape to homosexuality, our country is afraid to address the real problems concerning sexuality and simply ignores them. I've not dealt with all, or even most of the issues in this area, but maybe by increasing the awareness of sexuality people will start thinking about their actions and learn more about themselves and others as they really are rather than as we want them to be.

Columnist's comments important

Re: Jim Sterns' letter "Senate leader deserves respect, not condemnation," in the Sept. 26 Collegian:

Jim Sterns has succeeded where few others dare to succeed (at least in a public forum). He has flouted the rules of rational argument and has managed to impune the character of a Collegian columnist, all in one fell swoop.

In her column of Sept. 24, Catherine Sayler questioned whether Student Senate Chairman Mark Jones, senior in management, fairly represented student opinion concerning the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum referendum as insignificant (64 percent of those voting voted to reconsider the coliseum issue — 2 percent less than the two-thirds majority required for senate action), then can Jones fairly claim to represent student opinion on this issue?

In his defense of Jones, Sterns accuses Sayler of "manipulating the statistics" and points to an apathetic "9 percent" voter turnout. Unless my trusty calculator fails me, 2,000 out of roughly 18,200 constitutes an 11 percent voter turnout (but then, what's 2 percent anyway?) I would argue that, in fact, the vast majority of college elections are decided based on voter turnouts in the range of 10 percent to 15 percent. Indeed, we might well ask at what magical cut-off value does an election become representative?

Sterns then resorts to character assassination by claiming that Sayler is "guilty of the greatest injustice an elected official can commit" in being forced to resign from senate. In fact, Sayler is "guilty" of nothing. She resigned because she was no longer eligible. In the end, Sayler's character has nothing to do with the issue at hand. If her facts are accurate and her reasoning sound, then her argument merits consideration.

Instructor violates campus policy

Re: Shelly Dicken's article, "Godly instruction focus of crop course," in the Sept.

26 Collegian: Dicken's article regarding Stanley Ehler. professor of agronomy, was enlightening to say the least. I was unaware that I, or any of the women students of my acquaintance, were here at the University to find "Mr.

The possibility that a faculty member with such beliefs about the reasons women attend a university could be advising women students regarding their education is frightening. Most of us are here preparing for a fulfilling career in a society in which the economic situation dictates the necessity for most women to work outside the home for some period of our lives.

Not only does he seem to know what is right for everyone, he claims to know what women want in spite of what they say. He degrades women by calling us liars and insinuating we do not know our own minds.

Further, although men and women may see things differently, it should not be an issue in the classroom of a university which has a policy prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race or gender. Consider the outcry that would arise if a professor stated that similar instruction of black and white students would be a mistake.

The University's sexual harassment policy states that "Sexual harassment is any behavior which ... interferes with an individual's work or learning environment." Not only is he able to interfere with a student's learning environment, but by promulgating such antiquated ideas in an open classroom, he interferes with the education of men and women in his classes by not offering them the equal education to which they are entitled.

In the interest of brevity, I have not addressed the issue of religion in the classroom, but it is my opinion that steps should be taken to prevent such blatant violation of University policy regarding discrimination against women.

Quality event

At a time when we are subjected to so much negativism, an experience with something of quality can have a significant, uplifting effect on those fortunate enough to be a part of the event or activity. Such was the case for me and, I suspect, all who participated in the 75th Anniversary Colloquium for the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications. Harry Marsh, head of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, and Professor Max Milbourn, together with those serving on the 75th Anniversary Committee can be very proud of what was an event of exceptional quality - quality that one expects to be characteristic of an excellent University.

Alumnus harms

It is interesting that one of our alumni, Gilbert Johnson, of Colorado Springs, Colo., told the University that the architect's budget estimates for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum were on target. When Gossen Livingston Associates of Wichita were asked if they would rely on Johnson's advice in the future they responded with an "unqualified and absolute no.'

In the same issue of the Collegian, presumably the same Johnson is listed as one of the alumni representatives on the Presidential Search Committee.

In his area of expertise, contracting, Johnson's advice was less than helpful, though it was free. What can one expect of his advice in an area for which his qualifications are unknown, namely administering a university?

KSDB to maintain music format

Re: Yvette Guislain's letter, "KSDB should keep current format," in the Sept. 24

Drifting around campus is a letter published in Tuesday's Collegian suggesting that KSDB is changing its format. The letter seems to suggest that we'll soon be a Top-40 radio station.

As a public station, KSDB has a responsibility to provide programming unavailable from other stations in the market. Hence the term "alternative Guislain is right in that our listenership seems to be growing, as is the local interest in new music. Our own research shows, however, that this growth has been heavily lopsided toward the male population. As a result, KSDB is working on a way to expand our female audience.

To a point, the rumer is true; KSDB is making some changes. We are now in the process of creating a new music policy for programming more appealing to more people. This can be done without KSDB becoming an "all-hit" station, and it will.

The band INXS, may say "don't change a thing," but INXS doesn't provide the funds KSDB needs to survive. We're funded through student and local merchant funds. We don't believe it's right to take money from all students, and program to a small number of them.

We also don't believe local merchants will want to continue underwriting KSDB if we make no attempt to gain a wider audience. KSDB is a campus and a community radio station, and we must serve both groups to the best of our ability

I thank Guislain for her input, and invite anyone concerned with KSDB's future to write to us. Public input is the best way for us to determine what the public wants.

'Bud' T-shirt turns into face of success

By LORI LUGINBILL Contributing Writer and BECKY WILEY Features Editor

When we think of our favorite cartoon characters some of us think of Garfield, Snoopy and Bud Stange. Bud Stange?

Jeff Bruntzel, a 21-year-old from Hutchinson, created this goofylooking guy last summer. His cartoon face first appeared on a Styrofoam cup, but it is now across the fronts of about 4,000 T-shirts.

Bud Stange's success came about by accident, Bruntzel said, but he has been doodling with the picture of Bud since he was a junior in high

One evening after work, Bruntzel and a friend, Jeff Austin, also from Hutchinson, were drinking beer and playing cards. Bruntzel said the two were acting crazy and he carved a face on the side of his Styrofoam cup.

The two then decided to give the face a name. They chose the name Bud because they thought he looked like a Bud Light beer drinker. The last name, Stange, is the last name of a mutual friend, and they thought it had a nice ring when put with Bud.

At the end of the summer, Bruntzel had six T-shirts made with Bud Stange's face on them.

Since that time, Bud has been an Bruntzel said every time he wore the shirt in public, people would ask him where he got it.

"Bud Stange is a personality," Bruntzel said. "He's the type of character anyone can relate to." Different people see different things in him, he said. A lot of girls have told Bruntzel they think Bud is cute.

Bruntzel said he borrowed money from his father to have another 100 shirts printed. The shirts were gone within five weeks.

It's still hard for Bruntzel to believe how popular Bud has become, he said. "I didn't mean for any of this Bud Stange gimmick to even happen," he said.

"Bud just took off by himself, and I have been trying to keep up with him ever since," Bruntzel said.

He describes the cartoon character as being nuts about classical music, a faithful watcher of MTV and probably a life insurance salesman.

The large face and skinny stickfigure body of Bud is printed on the fronts of T-shirts and sweatshirts in places as far away as Thailand, Bruntzel said.

Two of the six original T-shirts Bruntzel had printed belong to two of his closest friends who attend K-State. Todd Norton, junior in marketing, attended school in Hutchinson with Bruntzel and they have been friends for several years.

"It's been fun seeing Bud grow from the six original T-shirts to a copyright and the ad in Rolling Stone magazine," Norton said.

As Bud's popularity grew, Bruntzel decided to try to obtain a copyright on the character. Bruntzel contacted a copyright lawyer in Kansas City and began learning of the complicated process of obtaining a copyright.

For the copyright to be approved, Bruntzel was required to submit a picture of people wearing Bud Stange shirts, examples of any advertisements which might be used, a picture of the character alone, "instant success," his creator said. and the date and reason for the character's creation.

> It took about six months to clear Bud, Bruntzel said. The reason clearing the character took so long was because those granting the copyright had to make sure Bud was unique, and not a duplication of another character. The cost of the copyright was $200.

> Bruntzel said he has had response from people in nearly every state. He said the T-shirts are especially popular in Alaska, Palm Beach, Fla., New York, Philadelphia, and New Jersey. He has also had response from Canada and Japan. A majority of the shirt sales come through the Calhoun's clothing store chain and Rolling Stone magazine adver-

Bruntzel said several shirt companies are also interested in selling the Bud shirts. He believes selling the shirts to retail shirt companies would be his smartest business

Channel 12, the Wichita CBS affiliate, interviewed Jeff on the 6 o'clock news several months ago. Jeff explained how the character was created and how he has come to Bruntzel sent T-shirts to David Letterman, Paul Shaffer and the band in August. Two weeks ago, one of the guitarists wore his "Bud Stange" on Late Night with David Letterman, he said.

"I wrote a letter telling them they could wear them (the T-shirts) while mowing the lawn, around their apartments or even on TV - hint, hint," Bruntzel said.

Since Bud's debut, Bruntzel has created four other Buds - Doctor Bud, Toga Bud, Hollywood Bud and Panty Raid Bud. Bruntzel said Doctor Bud has a stethoscope around his neck and is holding a big syringe. Toga Bud is wearing a toga, of course, and is holding a mug of beer. Hollywood Bud is wearing a pair of Wayfarers sunglasses.

The silkscreening on the shirts is done by the Anderson Sign Company, of Manhattan, Bruntzel said.

Bruntzel said his dream for Bud Stange is that he will eventually become a comic strip.

His dream for himself is to have a successful music career. He is currently the lead guitarist in a Hutchinson rock band called Rif Raf, and also the owner of several guitars. Jeff is a junior in music at WSU and commutes daily from Hutchinson to Music club presents listening 'Alternative'

By JANIS SMISCHNY Collegian Reporter

For the past year, music lovers have had the opportunity of joining a different club, the Alternative Music Brigade.

Every Monday night, club members listen to and discuss such groups as REM, The Replacements, Micronotz and Oingo Boingo at Mannequins Ltd., said Joel Hornbostel, graduate in journalism and mass communications and club treasurer.

Alternative music technically isn't commercial and is not accepted by the masses, Hornbostel said, but some alternative bands such as Tears For Fears and REM have been accepted.

The club was started last year by Brian Finegold, a former student, because he was determined to get alternative music played in Aggieville bars. With the help of the campus radio station KSDB-FM, Finegold created the Alternative Music Brigade, Hornbostel

In September 1984, the brigade became a registered campus organization after a membership drive in the Union. Finegold didn't return to school this year, but other members of the club decided to continue the brigade, Hornbostel said.

The 55-member club is "a fellowship of appreciators of alternative music," he said. "The members of the club are all in their own niches and what the Alternative Music Brigade does is put all the little niches together into a fellowship.'

The brigade publishes a monthly newsletter including record reviews, columns, poetry and anything creative about the music scene in Manhattan and around the country, Hornbostel said.

An Aggieville bar is used for a location to meet because management gives them freedom to play a variety of music. In the future the club would like to meet twice a University of Oklahoma defensive end Kevin Murphy grabs hold of Kansas State tailback Todd Moody and drags him down during first half.

K-State's ID upsets coach, OU players

By DAVID SVOBODA Assistant Sports Editor

University of Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer told the national media earlier this week that he was worried his club might overlook K-State and look ahead to their meeting with the University of Texas next weekend in Dallas.

After thirty minutes of play Saturday afternoon, Switzer's fears appeared to be justified as Oklahoma led at the half by just 14 points. Two quarters later, however, Oklahoma had erased those fears and rolled to an impressive 41-6 victory.

Was Switzer happy? Yes, but he also made it a point to let his players and the media know that one impressive win does not a season make.

"We were very slow getting started," Switzer said. "We played like a young, inexperienced team and it kept us from getting points we should have gotten on the board.

"Our kids have got to realize that things are going to get a lot tougher for them before they get any easier. We're certainly not done learning yet." For a team that isn't "done learning yet,"

Oklahoma's effort Saturday was impressive statistically. The Sooners gained 530 total yards on the day - 353 yards rushing and 177 yards passing - and had 30 first downs. The Sooners were equally impressive defensively. Oklahoma's defense held K-State to just 121 total yards and six first downs on the day. But were the Sooner defensive players satisfied? Hardly.

A fumble by Oklahoma punt returner Derrick Shepard early in the third quarter set up K-State's lone score of the day, a 6-yard touchdown pass from Randy Williams to Todd Elder. The play prevented Oklahoma from recording a shutout and left several Sooner defenders upset.

"It's frustrating that we didn't get the shutout," said linebacker Brian Bosworth, who led Oklahoma with seven tackles. "I've been here two years and we haven't gotten one yet. But if we get one next week against Texas, it will make it all the sweeter.

All-American noseguard Tony Casillas echoed Bosworth's sentiments.

"It was frustrating that we worked as hard as we did all day and didn't shut them out," Casillas said. "We knew we were well prepared for the game, but we had to guard against looking past them (K-State).

"We were confident that we could stop their offense. I'm glad we weren't thinking about Texas. We had to beat K-State first because it was a conference game and there was a lot riding on it."

Switzer, too, was disappointed the defense didn't get the shutout.

Oklahoma dominated K-State on both the offensive and defensive sides of the field. The Sooners amassed 530 yards in total offense and held the Wildcats' offense to just 121.

Oklahoma running back Lydell Carr ran for 136 yards on 25 carries. Sooner quarterback Troy Aikman completed 10 of 14 passes for 177 yards.

Sooner Coach Barry Switzer thought Oklahoma should have dominated even

"I was sorry that the defense didn't get a shut out, they deserved it," Switzer said.

Despite Oklahoma's obvious edge, not only on the scoreboard, but in the statistics as well, Moon came away happier with his team's performance than he has on Saturdays past.

"I feel better about the team right now than two weeks ago," Moon said. "I'm not satisfied by any stretch, but I thought we played better offensively and defensively." Split end Gerald Alphin believes that the Wildcat team made improvement as well. "Even though the score wasn't that great, I thought we played with a lot more enthusiasm and more intensity," Alphin said.

K-State absorbed its worst defeat of the year, but this week it wasn't to just anybody. This was mighty Oklahoma, the secondranked team in the country with the feared defense and powerful wishbone offense. "Oklahoma's a great football team. There's no doubt in my mind about that,"

Of all the statistics in Oklahoma's favor, perhaps most telling in the final outcome was

The Sooners ran 90 offensive plays compared to 51 for the Wildcats.

"(The defense) played as well as they could play," Moon said. "There's no way you can physically play that many snaps.'

After a 0-0 standoff in the first quarter, Oklahoma controlled the rest of the opening half, moving out to a 14-0 halftime lead.

Leon Perry and Carr rushed for the Sooners' touchdowns in the first half.

The only time in which K-State posed any type of threat to the Sooners came after the opening drive of the third quarter when K-State's Troy Faunce punted to Oklahoma's Derrick Shepard. Shepard dropped the punt and K-State recovered at the Sooner 37.

Taking possession on offense. Wildcat quarterback Randy Williams completed a 31-yard pass to tight end Kent Dean to the Oklahoma six. On the next play, Williams found flanker Todd Elder with a pass in the end zone for the lone K-State touchdown. Oklahoma's Steve Bryan blocked the extra point attempt making the score 14-6.

K-State's Matt Jacobs then attempted an onside kick which the Sooners recovered on the Oklahoma 42. Moon said that K-State tried the onside kick to "try to get the crowd involved and try to get our kids thinking positively and have a chance.' "We're not in a situation when we're 0-4 that we need to sit back," Moon said. "We need to try to make something good happen.' Besides the lone K-State touchdown, Oklahoma ruled the second half. The Sooners scored on rushing touchdowns by halfbacks Patrick Collins and Don Maloney, an interception return by defensive back Lonnie Finch and a pair of field goals by place kicker Tim Lashar.

K-State does not play Saturday. The next game will be Oct. 19 when the Wildcats will travel to Lawrence to meet the University of Kansas Jayhawks at Memorial Stadium at

The Wildcats opened conference play against the Sooners Friday. K-State went into the match with a 7-4 record and left Ahearn with a 7-5

The match lasted two hours, seven minutes and went five games. OU won the match 15-7, 13-15, 15-12, 12-15 and 15-12.

The fourth game of the match was a pivotal one for K-State. At one time K-State was down 9-2 in the game. But behind the deep corner shots of senior co-captain Donna Lee, the Wildcats mounted a charge.

K-State tied OU at nine points and then went on to defeat the Sooners 15-12. In the fifth and final game of the match, K-State developed a lead over the Sooners, but couldn't hold off Oklahoma.

"We didn't maintain our composure as well as we could have against OU," head coach Scott Nelson said. "We learned a very valuable lesson. When we had the lead, our intensity waivered. 15-12 isn't losing volleyball, it just comes down to who gets the breaks."

The leading attacker for K-State was Lee, who was successful on 24 kills (scoring hit) in 56 attempts and seven errors, for an attacking percentage of 30 percent. An attacking percentage is the number of kills, minus the errors, divided by the total number of attempts.

Saturday night brought the intrastate rival, the University of Kansas Jayhawks, into the confines of Again K-State found themselves in a hard fought match but came out on top of the Jayhawks in five games -15-6, 8-15, 14-16, 15-5 and 15-10.

Like the OU contest, the fifth game proved to be quite a battle.

"In the fifth game against KU, we maintained our composure," Nelson said. "After we were ahead, I watched closely how we would react when KU made runs at us. We did a great job of maintaining our poise and a four- to six-point lead.'

Lee was the dominating force on both offense and defense for K-State against the Jayhawks. Lee attacked 53 times and was successful on 29 kills while making five errors for an attacking percentage of 45 percent. Defensively, Lee had 30 digs for the Wildcats. "Donna took their best attacker out of the match with her defense,"

Fatigue finally caught up with K-State's men's and women's cross country teams as both took third at the Oklahoma State University Invitational on Saturday in Stillwater, Okla.

'We've really been working hard," Head Coach Steve Miller said. "I tried to have us sneak through the meet. I thought we still could run well even though we were tired. However, the competition was better than I anticipated."

K-State finished with 73 points, just two points behind secondplace Iowa State University.

Pacing the women's team was Jacque Struckhoff, who finished in sixth place with a time of 17

Stadler placed eighth in 17:22.85. Alysun Deckert placed 11th in 17:29.61, followed by Lisa Wakeham (17th in 17:38.41) and Nancy Hoffman (31st in 18:10.17). The University of Houston won the women's portion with 47 points. After Iowa State and K-State was Oklahoma State University with 99 points, the University of Oklahoma University with 189, Wichita State University with 197 and the University of Kansas with 228. There were 13 men's teams at the meet.

Leading the men's team to its third-place spot was Bryan Carroll, who came in ninth in a time of 30:28.73.

The harriers will be running Saturday at Ames, Iowa.

"I was sorry that the defense didn't get the shutout. They deserved it," he said. "Unfortunately, we gave them the ball on a special teams mistake and they were able to capitalize."

After last week's lackluster offensive showing in a 13-7 win over the University of Minnesota, Oklahoma's offensive players also felt like they had something to prove Saturday. Fullback Lydell Carr was pleased with the Sooners' offensive effort, but he and Switzer both said the offense still has a long way to go before it reaches the point the players and coaches would like.

"This is one game where we had to come out and show what we could do," Carr said. "We had to show the offense could move the ball. They (K-State) have a physical defense, but our offensive line did a great job handling them today. We've come a

"There are some things we need to correct, like the mistakes we made offensively. Experience should handle that," he said, "but we still are looking to put together a game where our offensive and defensive efforts are both what we know they can be."

The search for perfection is what keeps Oklahoma in the top 20 in the nation each week, Switzer said. "We're a good football team, but

The 'Cats seemed to spin their wheels with a 2-1 lead until the seventh when they scored three times. Catcher Jeff Turtle hit a tworun homer after Kaifes singled home the first run of the inning.

Shortstop Victor Suarez capped a four-run, eighth-inning rally with a two-run double to left field. Sunday's games were the first for the Wildcats in 10 days. Head Coach Gary Vaught, though, didn't blame the layoff for the team's slow start in the first game.

"They're a good ball club," Vaught

Today is the deadline for Marshall Scholar applications. The scholarship awards $32,000 for two years of study and recipients will be announced in January. Applications are accepted from seniors and graduate students under the age of 25 in any academic discipline.

Rhodes Scholars' applications are due Thursday for $32,000 for two years of study at Oxford University, Oxford, England. Applications are accepted from seniors and graduate students under the age of 24 in any academic discipline.

The deadline for Truman Scholars' applications is Oct. 14. The scholarship is for $20,000 for four years of study and recipients are announced in April. Applications are accepted from sophomores who are pursuing public service in government at the local, state, national and international levels.

Alumnus to receive service award

Robert E. Wagner, president of the Potash and Phosphate Institute, Atlanta, Ga., will receive the University's Distinguished Service Award in Agriculture for 1985 Tuesday during a noon luncheon

The award recognizes those who have made outstanding contributions to a professional field or in public service related to agriculture. Wagner was nominated by the faculty of the Department of Agronomy for his years of national and international leadership in agronomy and for his achievement as a scientist, educator and

The third option would be an allnew facility at a cost of more than $3 million dollars at the current Humboldt Street location.

Collie said any of the three options, which would allow the center to be used for everything "from theatre productions to day-care," would be a vast improvement over current facilities

He said the center would fit in the proposed Manhattan Regional Shopping Mall setting because it would bring the cultural areas downtown.

"The mall and Cultural Arts Center would compliment each other due to their close location in relation to one another," Collie said.

The building was originally built in 1917 at a cost of more than $20,000 funded equally by the city and regional Rotary Clubs. After its' July 4, 1918, dedication, the building was used by the Army to provide a recreation facility for visiting soldiers during World War I. After the war, the city resumed ownership of the building.

In past years, the Manhattan Recreation Department has managed the building, using it for activities such as the Teen Outreach, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce offices and for housing the Manhattan Civic Theatre organization.

Education college receives $50,000 Regents back math program

By BOB SCHEIBLER Collegian Reporter

Students working toward certification in secondary math education have received a substantial boost from the Board of Regents.

The College of Education received a $50,000 grant from the regents, to be used to lessen financial strain on students working toward secondary math education certification.

The grant is part of $250,000 available to all regents schools to be used in various departments, said Jack Byars, assistant professor of curriculum and instruction and adviser to secondary math education

In the competitive grant program awarded about $24,000; the Fort Hays State Department of Physics, about $22,000; the Pittsburg State University Department of Math, about $40,000; the University of Kansas College of Education, about $35,000; and the Wichita State University Instructional Services program, about $26,000. The money will be used to help people get certified in secondary school mathematics. Two groups will be funded - teachers who are already certified as secondary teachers but are not certified in mathematics and those who are not yet certified as secondary teachers.

"We are particularly looking at the Fort Hays State University some nontraditional populations — Department of Mathematics was women, minorities, gifted and hanwomen, minorities, gifted and handicapped individuals - who would get priorities on the monies.

"Another part is to offer some courses at times in which they have not previously been available. For example, the Department of Mathematics over the next three semesters will offer one upperdivision mathematics course in the evening so in-service teachers could come in and take it. Ordinarily these classes are offered in the 8:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. time frame," Byars said.

The math department will offer more classes during the summer and will receive some of money from the grant to ease the strain on the summer school budget, he said.

Driving contest to test sl

By MARIBETH GOTTSCHALK Collegian Reporter

Students now have a new challenge - driving in the 1985 National Collegiate Driving Championships.

The championship, which is locally sponsored by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, is scheduled for 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. today and Tuesday in the West Stadium parking lot.

The competition is sponsored by Dodge, a division of Chrysler Corporation, which is providing the Dodge Daytona Turbo Z used in the contest. The competition is cosponsored by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., Unocal (a division of Union 76 Oil Co.), Ocean Pacific Sportswear, Champion Spark Plugs, USA Today and ANCO, a division of Champion.

The race is supported by the National Safety Council and sanctioned by the Sports Club of America.

The competition is taking place on more than 100 colleges campuses throughout the United States. The purpose is to promote safe driving habits in young drivers and establish an awareness of the dangers of drinking and driving, said Todd Croy, senior in mechanical engineering and president of the Manhattan chapter of ASME.

The winding course, marked by pylons, will be set up in West Stadium parking lot. Each contestant will begin with a practice lap around the course. The test is of one skill rather than speed. During the competition the car being driven will be locked into first gear and a remote control shut-off switch will be connected to prevent participants from driving off with the car. At the end of the two-day competition the contestant with the best official score will receive round-trip airfare and hotel accommodations in Daytona Beach to compete in the National Grand Finals.

Croy said the competition is free and open to any full-time undergraduate student with a valid K-State identification card and valid driver's license. Registration is at the site during the days of the competition.

"I want them to see the College of Architecture, the College of Engineering and the College of Business Administration. These colleges all have good things going and I want these things to be made aware of. There is a lack of communication as far as what the University has to offer," he said.

Shellenberger said she will try to relate her college experiences to recruit students from smaller towns. She is from Ransom, a small town in western Kansas.

Both new ambassadors said they plan to maintain their class load. "The busier you are the more you get done," Shellenberger said.

Another person, Paul Hoyt, 23, of Manhattan, was taken to Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka with a serious leg injury, he said.

The ages of the injured ranged in age from 18 to 30, Spain said.

Schmidt said the blast left a "white residue" throughout the four-room house, which was moved about two to three feet from its foundation. He also said several cars on an adjacent street were damaged by the explo-

Wamego Police Chief Ken Seger said authorities initially thought the explosion was caused by a natural gas leak, but they quickly dismissed that possibility because of the residue and the location where the blast originated, which was in the living room.

Detective Anthony Metcalf, Pottawatomie County Investigator said ATF agents found a jar of "white powdered substance" but Metcalf would not identity the substance.

Alpha Delta Pi and Phi Delta Theta with 180 points. Kappa Delta and Phi Kappa Theta accumulated 150 points and received second place. Sigma Sigma Sigma and Lambda Chi Alpha took third place with 120 points.

Other homecoming activities included the parade competition Saturday morning in which 13 floats were entered.

"The floats were pre-judged Friday night," said Tami Barham, Blue Key member and junior in social science and pre-law. "They were also judged along the route and were awarded spirit points."

This year's judges were Roger Trenary, instructor of economics; Robert Dahl, professor of architectural engineering and construction science; and Sara Garrett, assistant professor in architecture and design.

"We picked faculty members to cover all the areas we thought floats should be judged on, such as aesthetics and construction," said Keenan Beauchamp, member of the Blue Key parade committee and senior in engineering. "Professor Trenary was chosen as a member of the 'faculty-at-large.'

"There were a lot of people participating with the floats and they generated a lot of enthusiasm, Beauchamp said. "They helped create a little more excitement. There were points given (to the groups) based on overall enthusiasm."

In the float category of residence hall/independent floats, Edwards Hall took first place and Moore Hall received second.

A second category was set up for the residence halls to save construction time and try to interest more hall members in float design, Beauchamp said. Existing beds from last year's floats could be used to build on and decorations added to them, he said.

In the bed category, Putnam won first place, Marlatt and Ford Halls combined received second and the team of Haymaker, West Halls and Smurthwaite came in third.

In the greek float division, first place went to the team of Sigma Sigma Sigma and Lambda Chi Alpha. Alpha Delta Pi amd Phi Delta Theta received second and Kappa Delta and Phi Kappa Theta were Finals for both the Body Building and Yell Like Hell competitions were Friday in the Union Courtyard.

In the Body Building contest, the team of Pi Beta Phi and Sigma Phi Epsilon took first place. Alpha Delta Pi and Phi Delta Theta followed in second place and Alpha Chi Omega and Phi Gamma Delta came in third.

The team of Gamma Phi Beta, Delta Upsilon and Theta Zi received first in the Yell Like Hell competition. Second place went to Kappa Delta and Phi Kappa Theta. Alpha Chi Omega and Phi Gamma Delta

Various odd objects to be sold at auction

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Almost anything can turn up on the city's subways and buses, and thousands of items reach the system's lost-and-found office including three artificial legs, one wearing a scuffed shoe and half a pair of blue corduroy trousers.

Skis, wedding dresses, baby carriages, diamond rings, thousands of eyeglasses, keys, wallets, single gloves have been turned in. Once, someone found 100 pairs of white spats.

"It's amazing what people leave behind. I've seen a lot, but there are always a few surprises," says Lawrence Woods, supervisor of the Transit Authority's Lost Property Unit in

After all, he said, "We're probably one of the largest lost-andfounds in the country.

This week, Woods' agency is holding its first public auction in five years to dispose of some of the misplaced and unclaimed trinkets and treasures and clear space for more.

Who says New Yorkers aren't honest? On an average day, Woods' office receives 30 to 50 items from upright transit passengers workers.

The 700 lots that go on the auction block today and Tuesday include an 18-karat gold Cartier watch, a telescope, a fur coat, a food processor, several folding cots and boxes of dressmaker's shoulder pads.

Newspapers question Botha's sincerity

Mobs kill two by fire in South Africa

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Three leading Sunday newspapers portrayed President P.W. Botha as failing in a campaign to convince the country that he is sincere about racial reform, and police said black mobs burned two blacks to death.

The English-languae Sunday Star said that Botha suffered from "poor timing and even poorer marketing" in outlining plans for reform in recent speeches to his governing National Party while parts of the country remained under a state of emergency and blacks continued to Police headquarters in Pretoria said one black was burned to death Saturday on a heap of flaming tires in Langa township, near Uitenhage in eastern Cape Province.

In Soweto, near Johannesburg, witnesses said mourners at a funeral vigil for a riot victim became aroused Saturday by anti-apartheid speeches and burned a black police officer to death in his home.

He was the 13th black police officer known to have been killed by rioters in 13 months of violence in black townships. More than 750 blacks have died, about two-thirds of them shot by police. The others were vic-tims of black mob attacks. The mobs may suspect the victims of being informers or consider them collaborators with white authorities.

Botha has discussed plans to ease racial conflict and meet black demands for political influence and social change in four speeches to regional party congresses on reforms of the apartheid system of legalized race separation.

The president has proposed restoration of citizenship to blacks in four homelands considered by South Africa as independent countries. The South Africa, but would not give them the vote, in this nation ruled by the white minority.

Botha has offered to include blacks in the President's Council, an advisory body. The proposal would give blacks a voice in national politics for the first time but would not offer decision-making powers.

He has also hinted at a federal arrangement that would give blacks a greater say in government but would still exclude them from the present white-dominated Parliament, which includes separate chambers for Asian and mixed-race minorities.

Black leaders have objected that Botha did not address what they consider the fundamental issue, that most of the nation's 27 million blacks cannot vote in a country run by 5 million whites.

The Sunday Star asked, "Why, when the reforms were real and change would allow them to live in beneficial, did he (Botha) fail to capture the imagination of the people whose grievances he was trying to redress?" The newspaper said part of the answer was that blacks saw "a reluctance to address this problem directly."

> The Sunday Times of Johannesburg, the country's largest newspaper, said Botha's speech meant: "Apartheid has now joined the dodo and the dinosaur. Why, then, has there not been rejoicing in the streets of Soweto? Why does a sullen silence reign in Whitehall (the seat of British government) and Washington?

"The answer lies in a simple word. .. Marketing."

The Sunday Times urged Botha to lift the state of emergency that was imposed in parts of the country in mid-July to extend police powers against black rioters.

Urban planning board to study land rezoning

By TOM SCHULTES Business Editor

Once again the issue of a neighborhood-concept shopping center for the Northview addition will face the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board.

The board meets at 7 p.m. tonight in the Commission Meeting Room of the Manhattan City Administration building, 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue.

Manhattan developers Sid Meinhardt and Ruth Schrum will make a presentation for a public hearing regarding construction of a shopping center at the southeast intersection of Casement Road and Knox Lane.

The proposal is similar to one presented by Meinhardt earlier this year, with the deletion of a car wash and package liquor store. The current request is for rezoning from Single Family Residential District and Planned Unit Development (PUD), to Two-Family Residential

District and Neighborhood Shopping District. Past attempts for similar rezonings in the neighborhood have been denied.

Another public hearing, requested by Manhattan real estate agent Al Balloqui, regards a request to amend the Manhattan Zoning Ordinance to reduce the minimum size required for commercial and PUDs from onehalf acre, or 21,678 square feet, to 10,000 square feet.

The request follows an unsuccessful attempt this summer by Balloqui to rezone property at the southwest intersection of Poyntz Avenue and Fort Riley Boulevard from residential to commercial zonings. A PUD is a zoning unique to a location, with size and usage regulated by the commission.

Also to be considered by the board is the final development plans for the Manhattan Christian College Student Center PUD to be located at the corner of 16th Street and Anderson Avenue.

Committee launches hunt for new president

By VICKI REYNOLDS Government Editor

Comparing the K-State presidential search process to an Easter egg hunt in which "hundreds participate and thousands come to watch," Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Board of Regents, charged the Presidential Search Committee Monday with the task of reviewing presidential applicants.

During its first meeting the committee was instructed to deliver a list of at least three and no more than five names of candidates to the regents on or before April 1, 1986. The regents will make the final selection for the President Duane Acker's resignation becomes effective June 30, 1986. He is entering his 11th year as University president.

One of the first points of business was the election of Jerome Frieman, professor of psychology, as search committee chairman.

Regents Chairman Lawrence Jones of Wichita, discussed the committee's composition, which has been the subject of controversy since the unanticipated addition of three alumni representatives.

Jones said the decision to add three alumni members followed considerable discussion by the board. The regents' intention was to create a responsible committee and have the individual members work as a committee and not as representatives of a certain faction, he said.

"We don't contemplate or appreciate a committee representation of special interests," Jones told the committee. "You're here because in the board's judgment you're individually capable of considering which candidates will serve ably the interests of Kansas State University.

"The board was very anxious this be the best search, sell and select committee put together and I think we've done that," Jones

Koplik said committee representation is beneficial because it brings together people from disparate interests rather than factions or segments of the campus or community.

Jones told the committee it must be "happy, sure and comfortable" with all names forwarded to the board.

Koplik encouraged the committee to consider applicant confidentiality, because Kansas law does not require that the search process be public.

"If confidentiality is not offered," Jones said, "there will be a significant number of applicants who will not be available to you."

C.Q. Chandler, Wichita banker, moved that the committee "make every effort to maintain confidentiality to and through the selection of the next president" of K-State. The motion carried.

Koplik outlined two tasks the committee faces. One is a "critical issues assessment," in which the University's strengths and weaknesses are reviewed as well as how the institution is viewed. The second task, he said, is to develop a candidate profile.

The candidate profile is "our test," he said. "I've seen mismatches of what institu-

Rocks fall because of high wind

By The Collegian Staff

Rocks and debris from the roof of Moore Hall were the apparent culprits that knocked out windows from about four automobiles parked on the north side of Moore Hall late Monday afternoon.

High gusts of wind were reported throughout the day in Manhattan.

Wind gusts were out of the south to southwest at 40 to 45 mph, according to reports from a local radio station. The strongest wind gust, 63 mph, was recorded at 3:42 p.m., about the time the residents were notified over the intercom in Moore about the shattered automobile windows.

David Krumm, junior in predesign professions, whose back window was broken, said he Heard his license number announced over the intercom. He then contacted his insurance company and they advised him to take the car to his automobile dealer for a damage estimate

He also contacted officials at the KSU Police Department who said that there was nothing they could do because it was not an act of vandalism.

Wamego man faces charge for explosion

By The Associated Press

WAMEGO - A 26-year-old man was charged Monday with unlawful possession of explosives in connection with a pre-dawn explosion Sunday that moved a house off its foundation and injured more than a dozen party-goers.

A federal investigator said the materials found inside the east Kansas home could have been used to make a small bomb with firepower equivalent to several sticks of dynamite.

David J. Stewart, an occupant of the house, was charged in Pottawatomie County District Court with one count of possessing ex-plosives. Judge O.F. Maskil set an Oct. 17 preliminary hearing date and ordered Stewart held on $10,000 bond.

The explosion occurred around 4 a.m. Sunday during a party. Authorities revised the number of injured to 14 people, including five who had to be hospitalized.

Authorities said they found a bag in the house containing more than two pounds of suspected flash powder, a highly explosive material. Found separately was a cannister of potassium chlorate and several boxes of M-80 firecrackers.

"What we want to know now is Why was this stuff in the house? What was it going to be used for?"" said Metcalf.

According to some of those injured, a couple of small fire crackers were set off inside the house prior to the explosion, which shattered windows, moved the four-room house several feet off its foundation and sent debris slamming into cars parked on a nearby street.

Senate deadlock continues over federal debt proposal

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - While the government lived hand-to-mouth without credit in what President Reagan called an "emergency situation," the Senate failed Monday to break its deadlock over a balanced-budget plan that has stalled legislation to increase federal borrowing authority.

"We have to do something," said Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan. But there was no indication of a quick end to the tangle that kept the Senate in session over the weekend and delayed action on increasing the national debt limit to a landmark $2 trillion.

Senate Republicans planned to meet Tuesday morning to consider a plan by Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia that would set a schedule for voting on various amendments and wrapping up all the issues by Thursday night.

Senators spent Monday meeting in a series of private meetings off the Senate floor to discuss what might be done to curb debate and move on

At the White House, Reagan urged a gathering of Republican supporters to work for passage of the plan to set statutory limits on federal budget deficits in order to achieve a balanced budget by 1991.

"That's one proposal that is worth fighting for," Reagan said in his fifth pitch in four days for the plan.

He also complained that the proposal was "being held hostage for wrangling over the debt ceiling, putting the federal government in an emergency situation. The business of our nation must go forward. We need the debt ceiling increase passed."

Despite Reagan's warning, the government operated normally Monday.

However, John J. Niehenke, acting assistant Treasury secretary for domestic finance, said the government had a cash balance of $6.2 billion at the close of business Friday and that this was likely to be exhausted Monday.

Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard G. Darman sent Dole a letter - one of a series from the Treasury Department pleading for action on the debt limit - saying that when the government till becomes empty, "It is my understanding that, upon such notification, the Federal Reserve will then have to notify the banking system not to honor any government checks or electronic fund transfers.'

The Reagan administration has requested an increase in the national debt limit from its current $1.824 trillion to $2.078 trillion.

The House increased the debt limit on Aug. 1 as part of the budget outline it passed. But a separate vote is needed in the Senate.

Supporters of the balanced budget plan offered by Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., with the blessing of GOP leaders, have seized the debt limit legislation to force action on their proposal.

New lot to require parking permit

Recreational center users to pay

By KAREN MEIS Collegian Reporter

Free parking at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex will no longer be available as of Nov. 1.

To park in the new paved parking lot at the recreation center, "Zone C," users will be required to have a campus parking permit. Students who do not own a permit will be required to purchase one if they wish to use the complex lot.

KSU Police Department Chief Charles

Beckom said permits are required because University funds were used to finance the building of the lot, which cost about $120,000. The money used for construction came out of the parking fees

"When the committee discussed the issue, it decided that the available money should be used toward something which would bring in some (monetary) return,' Beckom said.

The Council on Parking, Traffic and Police Operations, comprised of faculty, staff and students, decided to require parking permits rather than turn down funds available to construct the parking lot. Future revenue from parking permit sales and tickets is necessary to maintain Beckom said any parking permit visitors, residence halls, general and faculty/staff - will be acceptable.

Palestinians seize Italian cruise ship

By The Associated Press

PORT SAID, Egypt - Palestinian hijackers seized an Italian cruise liner at sea Monday with more than 400 people aboard, demanded that Israel release 50 prisoners and threatened to blow up the ship if attacked, officials reported.

Italian Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini placed the nation's armed forces on alert.

An Italian Foreign Ministry report said 72 Americans were listed as passengers aboard the Achille Lauro.

Hours later, Patrizia Terese, a duty officer at the Foreign Ministry, told The Associated Press that 72 Americans and 20 Britons were among 600 passengers who left the ship in Alexandria for a day-long land tour. That would mean that all of the Americans and Britons listed in the previous ministry report had disembarked; but Terese emphasized that the figures were preliminary, and there could still have been Americans aboard the ship when it was hijacked.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Mike Austrian said the U.S. Embassy in Cairo was trying to locate the cruise organizers to find out how many Americans left the ship to visit Cairo and the nearby

Egyptian officials said the Achille Lauro had left Alexandria and was about 30 miles west of Port Said, its next destination, when it was commandeered by an undetermined number of hijackers and headed farther out into the Mediterranean, its destination

Word of the takeover came in a ship-toshore radio report by the hijackers' leader to Port Said at about 9:30 p.m. - 4:20 p.m. CDT. The guerrilla said the hijackers were members of the Palestine Liberation Front.

Many of the passengers who left the Achille Lauro in Alexandria had been scheduled to rejoin the cruise at Port Said, the northern entrance to the Suez Canal and 150 miles east of Alexandria. The vessel was then to continue on to Ashod on Israel's west coast before heading for Naples.

Policeman killed in London riot

LONDON - Police threatened on Monday to use tear gas and plastic bullets against street rioters, after some of the worst urban violence in Britain since 1981. One policeman was stabbed to death and 232 fellow officers were injured.

Twenty civilians also were hurt when more than 500 youths, some armed with shotguns, machetes and staves, battled police Sunday night and early Monday in the racially mixed north London district

Police Commissioner Sir Kenneth Newman told a news conference the riot — the fourth major outbreak of urban violence in Britain in a month - was the first in mainland Britain in modern times in which guns were used and a police officer was killed.

Group demands superpower aid

BEIRUT, Lebanon - A caller claiming to represent the captors of three Soviet Embassy employees said Monday they will be held until the United States and Soviet Union join forces to end Lebanon's 10-year-old civil war.

He also threatened the abductions of more Soviet and American citizens as a means of putting pressure on the superpowers. The authenticity of the call could not be determined.

The caller demanded that Moscow force Syria, its main Middle East ally, to call off leftist militias that were besieging fundamentalist Sunni fighters in the northern port city of Tripoli.

South Africa desegregates cinema

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - The white-minority government said Monday it will allow audiences of all races into some movie theaters in a step toward racial reform.

The accouncement stopped short of opening all South African movie houses and drive-ins to all races. But Piet Badenhorst, deputy planning minister, said in a statement that the Cabinet decided to approve applications from operators to desegregate downtown movie houses in some cities, and that others from drive-in owners also would be considered.

The government action on movie houses extended gradual desegregation that also applies to hotels, restaurants and beaches. Movie distributors have long sought to open cinemas to racially mixed audiences to help increase attendance.

Number of state AIDS cases rises

TOPEKA — While the national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta list only 11 AIDS victims in Kansas, there actually are 32 victims of the disease known to be living in this state and another seven persons who state officials suspect may have it.

Those latest figures on the extent of the disease in Kansas were given Monday to about 175 state employees and representatives of the news media who attended two informational sessions conducted by the state Department of Health and Environment to better acquaint that agency's workers with the facts and myths of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Most of those attending the two sessions work for KDHE, but other agencies were invited to send representatives and several did, including the Department of Corrections. Kansas has not reported any AIDS victims among its prison inmates, however.

The 11 cases listed by CDC are individuals who were diagnosed in Kansas as having AIDS and still are living in the state.

Another 21 victims had the disease diagnosed somewhere else and either returned home to Kansas or came to this state for treatment and are living in the state now, KDHE officials said.

Panel to survey school violence

TOPEKA - A legislative study panel voted Monday to conduct a survey of public school teachers across Kansas to help determine whether school violence is a significant statewide problem.

Sen. Phil Martin, D-Pittsburg, said he proposed that the Legislative Research Department conduct the survey after the department said in a recent report that few reliable statistics are available on the instances of school violence.

Martin said he hopes the survey, which was approved by the Special Committee on Education on a 4-3 vote, may be the first step toward a standardized reporting system for acts of school violence.

The reporting system was recommended by Rep. Rick Bowden, a Democrat from Goddard, where a junior high school principal was killed and two teachers were injured during a January shooting

A survey of administrators in the state's 204 school districts. presented to the committee during August, showed the only five of the state's largest districts had violence problems.

The administrators survey showed that 147 districts do not regard violence in the classroom to be a problem and have no policies for dealing with such acts.

Despite efforts, pollution persists

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Billions of dollars have been spent in the past dozen years to clean up the nation's water supply but pollution persists and threatens to increase, the administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency said Monday.

Cleaning up the problem will likely be the responsibility of state and local governments, EPA Administrator Lee M. Thomas told about 500 people at the 58th Annual Water Pollution Control Federation Conference.

"The end of water pollution is not in sight. It seems we're only holding the line against water pollution," he said.

Thomas said local, state and federal agencies have made progress in controlling "point source" pollution — pollution from an identifiable source. But "non-point source" pollution, in which the source is not discernible, is slowly contaminating surface and ground water

Unless something is done to control "non-point source" pollution, Thomas said, "we will have to renege on the promise made to the American people in the Clean Water Act" to clean up pollution.

The EPA chief said the federal government does not have the resources to run a large non-point source pollution program. "I'm not going to stand here and tell you we can get this program for free,"

Steriods may ease cystic fibrosis

BOSTON - Doses of steroids appear to protect young victims of cystic fibrosis from lung damage, the single greatest cause of illness and death in this common inherited disease, researchers say.

The study, conducted at Harvard University and Children's Hospital in Boston, showed that children who took the drug had healthier lungs and spent less time in the hospital than did a comparison group.

After four years, "we felt we had to stop the study, because it was becoming so obvious that the steroid group was better. We felt we neededto open it up and let people know," said Dr. Harvey S. Auerbach, who directed the study.

Steroids reduce inflammation, but they can cause serious side effects. The researchers said they do not recommend the drugs for routine use in cystic fibrosis until their findings are confirmed by a Osmond and Craig, a former Brigham Young University basketball player, met in Provo's 4th District Court on Friday for the first time since she filed for divorce in May, but did not speak to each other, said Osmond's attorney, Merlin Lybbert.

Lybbert said the two came to an agreement last week on how their property should be divided, but details were sealed by the court. The couple had been separated for six months before Osmond filed

Stepchildren sue Von Bulow

NEW YORK - Claus Von Bulow, acquitted of trying to murder his wife, says a suit by his stepchildren to take her fortune from him disgusted him and spoiled his vacation, according to a published report.

A Rhode Island jury convicted Von Bulow once of trying to murder his wife, Sunny, by injecting her with insulin in 1979 and 1980, but he won a retrial and a second jury acquitted him on June 10. His wife has been comatose since 1980 and is not expected to recover.

Sunny Von Bulow's children by an earlier marriage filed a civil suit against their stepfather, charging him with attempting to murder her and seeking $56 million in damages.

Owners of Wolf Creek file motion for hearing on rate-hike requests

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Citing hundreds of errors by state utility regulators, Kansas Gas and Electric Co. of Wichita and its two partners in the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant project on Monday filed motions for rehearing of their rate case before the Kansas Corporation Commission.

KG&E filed a 52-page document with the commission, outlining 73 reasons why it believes the utilities were denied a fair shake in the three months of hearings this summer on their requests for higher rates to pay for the $3.05 billion power plant.

Kansas City Power & Light Co. filed a 110-page motion, complete with new evidence, and the Kansas Electric Power Cooperative Inc. of Topeka entered its 18 objections in an abbreviated nine-page motion.

The three utilities were seeking $508.9 million in rate increases from their 460,000 Kansas customers but were granted a combined $153.5 million, or about one-third of their request. It was the biggest and longest rate case in Kansas history.

All three motions painted the order as unfair and called the threemember commission's decision "arbitrary, capricious, unlawful and un-

In filing the motions, the utilities exercised their last administrative option before appealing to Kansas courts. The rate order was handed down Sept. 27. Such requests for rehearing are routine and rarely granted. The utilities had said they might seek rehearings when informed of the decision. The commission now has 40 days to act on the motions.

Petitions for rehearings also were filed by a group of Johnson County city and county governments and an industrial group in Wichita which intervened in the case, citing grievances with the structure of the rates and other aspects of the commission's decision.

The major theme through all three utility motions was a lack of definition of prudence and error in comparing the costs of a hypothetical coal plant of similar size to that of a nuclear power plant.

In its decision, the commission said the utilities will be allowed to break even on their investment in Wolf Creek but will be barred from earning an additional return, or profit, on two-thirds of the total, or about $2.17 billion of the plant's cost. Of the remaining investment, the utilities will earn about an 11 percent return.

In addition, the commission penalized the utilities for excess generating capacity - building a larger plant than was needed to meet customer demand for power

KG&E, which serves 240,000 people in 100 Kansas towns, called the order "unreasonable" and started by charging that the commission, which regulates utilities in Kansas, failed to define the standard it used in finding imprudent action by the owners.

It said the commission's findings were "not based on any articulated standard of prudence" and were "arbitrary and capricious and therefore unreasonable.'

Van Zile may be site for computers

By JANIS SMISCHNY Collegian Reporter

The Board of Regents is considering transferring control of Van Zile Hall from the Department of Housing to the University administra-

The regents were presented the proposal by University representatives at a meeting Sept. 20, but a date for the decision has not been

The University is considering using Van Zile as a base for University Computing Activities, said Tom Gallagher, director of computing activities.

"If Van Zile becomes part of the University, then housing won't be responsible for the maintenance and the University will provide the operating expenses," Gallagher

Van Zile was closed as a residence hall a year ago because of the need for renovation and because of decreasing occupancy.

The proposal would include moving the two main computer systems in Cardwell Hall and Farrell Library to a central location such as Van Zile. Cardwell's computers are used for academic purposes and the computer in Farrell is for administrative work.

'The biggest advantage is, we could combine some of the functions that we have now in a multiple-use area and also, another benefit is that the computing folks will be close enough to do a better job of computing, because right now they are scattered across campus," Gallagher said.

The cost for complete renovation of Van Zile is estimated at $1.5 million, Gallagher said.

"If we move there or anyone else moves into Van Zile, it's going to cost about the same," Gallagher said.

A remote laboratory, where students can run programs similar to the remote laboratories at Durland Hall, Seaton Hall and Fairchild Hall, would be set up in part of the space left at Cardwell. The other excess space would be used by the Department of Physics, because of the move to Van Zile.

Because the computers require a large open space, the dining and kitchen areas in Van Zile are ideal for the computer machinery and the floors above will be used for office space and for microcomputer demonstration areas, Gallagher

"Computing Activities buys and resells computers, and the buyers should be able to try out the kinds of product they want and right now they can't, but the space will be used for this in Van Zile," Gallagher

He said he would also like to see training laboratories for University staff and students.

One problem the move would cause is hooking up the remote laboratories with the main computer base. This is because of communication problems between computer bases' users and the cable linkage.

"We would like to phase in this project along with the change over of the University telephone systems, because we could then have cables already down in the steam tunnels and it would save us some time and energy," Gallagher

AT&T can pay refund, cut rates, lawyer says

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - An AT&T Communications attorney on Monday told state utility regulators his company needs to refund $5.8 million in long distance fees to Kansas customers and reduce rates by $2.3 million in order to compete on equal footing in the rapidly expanding long-distance telephone market.

However, spokesmen for smaller long-distance telephone companies trying to get their foot in the door of the telecommunications field immediately refuted the claim, saying they will be driven out of business if AT&T is prematurely released from "the chain of state regulation."

The statements came as the Kansas Corporation Commission opened hearings on AT&T's request to refund customer overcharges in 1984 and 1985 and reduce its base operating fees on a permanent basis in the future.

Pres Sheppard, AT&T vice president, was the first witness to take the stand and he outlined the company's policy toward competition and elaborated on its need to cut rates.

The rates and refunds would affect long distance calls made within Kansas between the three long-distance service areas, generally the 913 and 316 area codes and the Kansas City metropolitan area. They would not affect interstate long distance calls those calls made to points outside the state - or calls made between cities within the same service area. Steven Davis, AT&T attorney, said large number of new companies are now competing for long-distance telephone service in Kansas. Without reductions, which he said more the reductions are needed because a closely reflect actual operating costs, AT&T cannot compete on equal footing.

what it costs to provide service, no more no less," Davis told the threemember commission during opening statements in the case. "Our goal is to set rates at a level that reasonably approximates the cost of service in Kansas so we can compete in Kansas and earn a reasonable profit.' He noted that a number of competing interests, such as MCI Telecommunications and GTE-Sprint, had intervened in the case and he speculated that they simply wanted to "frustrate this case" in an effort to keep AT&T's rates as high as possible.

'There's only one reason why they're here, they want our rates to go up, not down," Davis said. "If there's anything they can do to frustrate this case, we'll see it this

Sheppard said AT&T faces competition from 25 companies which are bidding for customers in 32 Kansas cities, the same cities which produce two-thirds of AT&Ts total revenues in Kansas.

James Grimes, MCI attorney, countered that AT&T was simply trying to drive his firm and other smaller long distance companies out of business by offering service at cost, or below.

In fact, he billed the case as "the most important telecommunications case the commission has ever considered" because with its decision, the commission will "determine the fate of telephone competition." And he warned the commission against granting refunds or lower rates which might be below actual costs. He said AT&T is trying to time its refunds and reductions so they will unfairly influence customers now being asked to mark a ballot and choose a long-distance telephone company.

'Egg-breakers' scramble for protection

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Worried that someone with a newfangled machine is poaching on their market, the nation's egg-breakers are scrambling for protection under the 1985

What alarmed the United Egg Producers, which represents those who break and process eggs for bulk users like restaurants, bakers and institutional kitchens, was a three-foothigh, canister-shaped device called the Egg King.

Developed by Mike Maynard of Tustin, Calif., the machine uses centrifugal force to break eggs and separate out the shell and membrane at a rate of a case a minute, relieving cooks of the laborious job of breaking eggs one at a time.

But it also means the 700 large egg users who so far have bought the machine can buy fresh eggs to use in their foods, rather than the liquid, frozen or powdered product marketed by the egg industry. So the egg producers, based in Decatur, Ga., hatched a plan.

They persuaded their home-state member of the House Agriculture Committee, Democrat Lindsay Thomas, to add an amendment to the emerging farm bill that prohibits processing of eggs "in any manner that does not allow examination of the content of individual eggs being processed" or lets shells mingle with the liquid during processing.

The producers argue that use of the machine opens the possibility of contamination and health problems, such as salmonella poisoning. The Agriculture Committee agreed, and passed the amendment.

When Maynard heard about the action, he asked his own congressman, Robert Badham, R-Calif., to come to the rescue. Badham plans to offer an amendment this week to the farm bill that would undo the anti-Egg King language.

The Thomas amendment "is patently an attempt by processors of low-quality eggs to monopolize the marketplace," said Maynard, who came to Washington to lobby for his machine and enlisted the help of the Retail Bakers of America, the National Restaurant Association and the American Hotel & Motel Associa-

New parking fee unjust

Well sports fans, prepare to pay up or do without.

The beautiful, new parking lot at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex can only be used with a parking permit.

Because of a decision by the Council on Parking, Traffic and Police Operations, students must pay to park at the complex if they don't already have a permit. The rec complex is not an accessible facility for walking. The University has students over a barrel on this one - it's an awfully cold jog out there in mid-January.

Many students who saved money and precious fuel by walking to campus will finally break down and buy a permit. They will want their share of use from the permit and will drive to campus which will further strain the crowded parking conditions - a situation the regents were trying to alleviate by building the parking lot at the rec complex.

Students are still paying off the bonds for building the rec complex through student activities fees. Otherwise, the facility is "free," with the exception of the parking permit.

Most students are likely to carpool, that is if they have a friend who has the same schedule as they do, and who intends to spend the same amount of time per visit at the facility.

Fitness fans who enjoy a oncea-week racquetball game or a game of basketball when they have spare time, will simply quit going to the rec center for entertainment.

Participation in intramural events may also be hampered by the parking fee. Although it's unlikely students will give up the chance to play on a team just because they don't want to buy a parking permit, motivation for individual events will be suppressed. It will also increase the chance of team members missing games because they can't find rides.

The alternative to buying a permit is to park in the unpaved area west of the intramural fields. Students have used this area before during parking overflow. No doubt it will be used much more from now on except after blizzards which, by the way, are most likely to strike in the heart of intramural basketball season.

All in all, the decision by the University to require parking permits at the rec center is another student ripoff.

Beliefs should determine direction in life

I was working down at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex last week and noticed about 10 guys participating in aerobics. I made some harmless crack to a female co-worker about these guys and she immediately turned and called me a male

I laughed the whole thing off at first, but the label bothered me. Was I really a male chauvinist? Would I someday be on Saturday Night Live wrestling women like Andy Kaufman did? Would I be leading protest marches against the Equal Rights Amendment someday?

I barely had time to contemplate this statement before my date confronted me with this question, "Wayne, what do you believe in?" This question also stumped me - but only for second, "I don't believe in guys doing aerobics," I replied.

But the whole issue wasn't resolved. I still hadn't satisfied her or myself as to why I thought guys shouldn't do aerobics, thus a column was born. The thesis: What do or don't I believe in and why?

Starting with the issue of aerobics, I looked up the word "chauvinist" in my dictionary. "Blind and fanatical patriotism," it read. I surely didn't mind guys doing aerobics because they were blinding me with fanatical patriotism. Rather, the thought of guys dancing around with a bunch of sweaty women just doesn't sit right with me inside.

You know the feeling - the one you get when your mother tells you to finish your milk after you just choked down her cooked carrots. The feeling you may have gotten when Ozzy Osbourne - who once ate a poor, helpless bat on stage - begged us to give money to poor, helpless children during the LiveAid concert. Although I can only describe the feeling and not name it, it is concrete - just drink that milk sometime.

WAYNE LONG Collegian Columnist

I don't believe in man. That is to say I will never put my faith in a human being. For man is subject to satisfying his or her earthly desires before anything else. Thus I put my faith in God, who, in his most meager form, still rides above man simply because he will not abandon you for money, lust or power. I can believe in someone like that.

I believe in treating a woman like a lady at all times, even if she isn't acting like one.

I don't believe in colored underwear. If you want to show off your pretty undies, wear them outside your jeans so everyone can see them and say, "That guy sure is weird, but he sure wears attractive underwear."

I don't believe a church has anything to gain from advertising in their bulletin, as a church I attended in Manhattan did. Granted they were advertising religious books, but I can't help but wonder if someday I will receive a church bulletin with a Pepsi-Cola trademark on the back of it.

I don't believe in homosexuality. It's not that I will treat these people any different or condemn them in any way. I just don't believe in their lifestyle or the morality on which they base it.

I don't believe in judging people on their past. We've all made mistakes that we aren't very proud of. I strongly believe that deep down inside, everyone is trying to be a better

I believe in children and everything they class as a teacher does. I believe that if you want to be like somebody else, then go shave your head and be in the movie "Ghandi." I believe in myself.

Now before someone picks up a pen and writes to the editor, let me remind everyone that I was only answering a question. I'm not trying to force my beliefs on anyone, in fact, I'm trying to do quite the opposite. I would like everyone right now to take a minute and write down what you believe in. Your finished product is YOU, and from this product your direction in life can be found.

If you feel so overwhelmed right now with studies, friends or relationships that you just don't know which way to turn, go out and fight for what you believe in and I guarantee your direction will become clear.

"But Wayne, if what you guarantee is correct, you're destined to become an egotistical, chauvinistic male hermit who babysits children during church.'

"Yes, this may be true, but it won't be because the Nielson ratings, Ghandi, or a consensus of the student body told me to do so. Rather it will be because I stood up for what I believe in.

Perhaps the whole purpose of this column can be summed up with a quote from Joel Climenhaga, associate professor of speech, who began the first class I ever attended as a college student by saying, "students, whatever you do in this class, do not lose your identity." Well Mr. Climenhaga, I haven't and I never will.

The Board of Regents?

Well maybe, but the fact there is no liner in the can rules them out. No, this brand of allegorical communique is probably indicative of a body of slightly more prominence - God possibly.

And what is even more significant is that University officials still hoisted the state flag and Old Glory itself under the container of dispose as if trying to find someone to share the blame.

Could the Supreme Being be making a statement not only on the policies and practices of those who rule in Anderson Hall (and thus the University) but the United States of America as well?

But the winds becameth stronger.

One must wonder, "Why Anderson Hall?"

No one has reported any waste disposal units on top of Cardwell, or Denison, or even on top of the football offices at KSU Stadium.

Just as student and University "leaders" implored of the regents last semester, "the students want the biggest and best coliseum!" then by the same logic could God be decisively stating, "THIS COLISEUM BUSINESS IS BAD CHEESE!"

Is it any wonder that the direction of the trash can shifted in the wind from Calvin to Seaton halls? Could God be saying use faculty and student expertise on the coliseum when such valuable and practical expertise has been nil in the past?

If this is truly a message from the Almighty then others beware lest they wish a trash can to

Blue Key schedules meeting to discuss Homecoming

K-State's 1985 Homecoming came to an apex Saturday with the parade and announcement of the new K-State ambassadors. Homecoming day, with the arrival of thousands of alumni coming back to see old classmates and friends, ended a week of activities made successful by thousands of students.

The spirit of Homecoming week is meant to promote a common dual goal overcoming individual differences and differences between groups. The goal is to emphasize common interests of K-State students and celebrate the "coming home" of alumni.

The spirit of Homecoming week is meant to be non-political and non-controversial.

The spirit of Homecoming week is meant to foster pride for K-State traditions, bringing together the diversified, and sometimes, combatant interests of all students.

With hundreds of hours of preparation and organization, the 16 members of Blue Key were very pleased to have seven of nine residence halls and 25 of 41 greek houses participate in this year's Homecoming activities. Blue Key is not out for "pumping our own balloon," rather the success of Homecoming is entirely due to the intense participation of everyone involved.

So that next year's Homecoming is more successful than ever before, we invite all person's with concrete recommendations (no mud slinging please) to Blue Key's next

Faculty politics prohibit progress

In a recent meeting called for the purpose, Faculty Senate requested the Board of Regents to correct the imbalance of the presidential search committee created by the appointment of three new alumni to the group. The concern was the lack of representation of the scholarly community. I laud their efforts.

Another imbalance was recently brought to my attention. Among the faculty there are those who gain personal recognition by seeking political office. Some are more successful at this than others, they even become senate presidents. This group as a whole is not defined by scholarly endeavors but rather by political ambition.

Another segment of the faculty is considerably less in the forefront than those of the first group. They do not seek the type of recognition that seems to drive those of political inclinations. They choose instead to rely solely on their scholarly endeavors to mold their reputations. Some are more successful than others and may even achieve international respect. They are known not by their political endeavors but by their contributions to knowledge.

By appointing their own to the search committee, the senate is playing the part of the Board of Regents which they so indignantly condemn. They have ignored the very best the scholarly community has to offer and have appointed those who have achieved political success to represent us.

If the regents see fit to correct the imbalance then we might look to the outstanding scholars among us for the additional three. If you look closely at those who produce the very best in scholarship you may be surprised to find that they are superior in intellect, imagination and penchant for hard work. And those are unbeatable skills for any endeavor (including a University president, I might add).

FONE seeks help

The week of Oct. 7 has been proclaimed Community Awareness Week by the FONE Crisis Center. FONE has been in existence for 15 years, offering a confidential, caring, anonymous and non-judgmental listening and referral service to those who need someone to talk to about their problems.

Last year we handled more than 3,500 calls. Ninety were suicide related. The other 3,410, though not all crisis situations, were given equal attention.

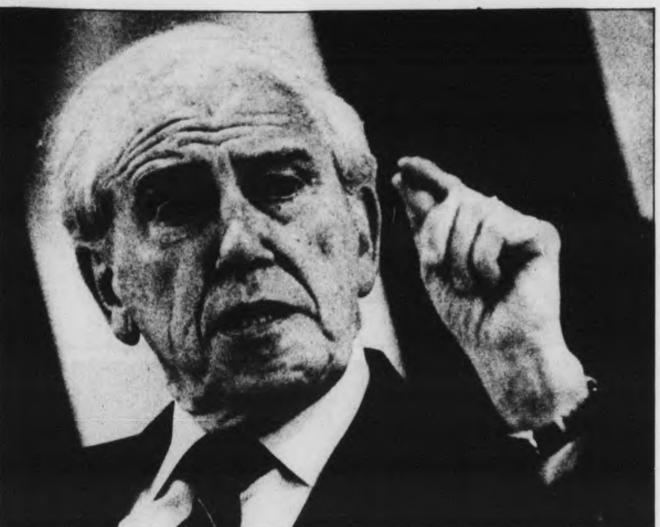

The week will culminate with a Volunteer Training Session Saturday, Oct. 12 and Sunday, Oct. 13 at the University For Man 1221 Thurston. It takes 50 volunteers per week to operate FONE. We need you, students. Please come and bring a friend.

Union to retrain auto workers

Industry to change attitude

By TOM SCHULTES Business Editor

The "democratization" of the auto industry was the forecast of a former national labor union president Monday night at the 27th Annual Mountain-Plains Management Conference at the Manhattan Holidome.

Douglas Fraser, who served as president of the United Auto Workers Labor Union for six years beginning in 1976, and is currently a member of the Chrysler Corp. board of directors, told conference participants the auto industry was experiencing "a total change in the attitude of management.

"It is revolutionary," he said. "In (the workers') perceptions it represents equality and equal opportunity.

"(Workers) will not accept authoritarian rule or unsafe working conditions," he said.

Using the example of the joint Toyota Motor Co. and General Motors Corp. factory in Muni, Calif., Fraser said worker absenteeism has been cut from low 20-percent rates on Mondays to approximately 2 percent after the merger.

Fraser, who came to the United States at the age of 7 from Glasgow, Scotland, noted the change at the GM plant was achieved even with the same local union officials. He attributed the workers' change in attitudes to the formation of work teams, with the ability to provide input toward changes in the factory.

One change in attitude by management Fraser noted was in response to changes in technology. The industry plans to budget $1 billion in funds over six years to retrain auto workers whose jobs have been eliminated by new technologies.

the introduction of new technology," he said.

The funds would pay for retraining in the automotive sector or other areas of manufacturing, Fraser said.

"It's not enough to play the traditional role...the representation of workers have to have a voice when decisions are being made," Fraser

In his role of union president, Fraser negotiated labor concessions, part of a large package in aiding the financial recovery of the Chrysler dealers and the company's workers. "It's an absolutely spectacular recovery," Fraser said of the Chrysler turnaround. He said the corporation made $2.4 billion nontaxable in 1984 and would probably make $1.5 billion in 1985 after taxes. "We have to be willing to keep experimenting...we have to be bold,"

Fraser said of finding solutions. He said one problem in finding the new solutions is "we're all captives '(The UAW) never tried to impede of what's going on in the broader scene," with corporations still controlled by governmental economic policies

> Fraser also noted the impact the farm crisis had on the UAW's membership ranks.

> Fraser said a combination of a 40 pecent tariff on exported farm machinery and the economic state of American farmers were responsible for the UAW having 50 pecent less farm machinery workers in their ranks than in 1979.

"I detect a seeming inablity to come to grips with problems before there is a crisis," Fraser said. "We must develop the capacity and the Chrysler credit for the recovery, he courage to change with times and

Planning board approves MCC facility

By COLLEEN WILSON Staff Writer

A plan allowing a multi-purpose facility for Manhattan Christian College was approved by a 3-1 vote at a meeting of Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board Tuesday night.

The facility, to be located along 16th Street between Laramie Street and Anderson Avenue, will include 12 one-bedroom and 12 two-bedroom apartments above a row of retail stores and a food service center in a single unit.

During the plan's presentation, Larry Hulse, chief city planner, said the only difference between the preliminary plan and the final plan submitted for approval was that the new Student Service Center, originally to be located in three separate buildings, has been redesigned to be contained in a single building. The plan, following its approval, will be presented to the Manhattan City Commission for approval at their Oct. 24 meeting.

Another public hearing conducted by the board considered a request by Manhattan real estate agent Al Balloqui.

Balloqui, who wants to operate a business from a house, requested that the board amend the current Zoning Ordinance minimum district size to 10,000 square-feet, less than one-half the current required size of 21,678 square feet.

Barbara Rees, 114 Evergreen Ave., said "one person with a deteriorating house who wants to have a business is not a sufficient reason (to change the ordinance)."

Balloqui said development is done for profit and feasible purposes and he was asking for a change in the minimum lot requirement because it would be more consistent with Manhattan's zoning code.

"Manhattan is missing out on motivation to generate creative center, planned for the southeast corideas," Balloqui said.

Board member Lee Nash said "he's got a problem. It's too bad he is in the wrong spot.

"He asked us to change ordinances and I don't agree," Nash said before the unaminous vote denying the change

The board also heard a request to rezone a tract of land from R-1, Single-Family Residential District and Planned Unit Development to R-2, Two-Family Residential District and C-2 Neighborhood Shopping Center was approved by a vote of 3-0, with Phelps abstaining from

Hulse said the only difference was the strict rezoning of the once PUD and it needed to acquire to the rules

Mike Broderson, 2120 Halls Landing, said he opposed the shopping ner of the intersection of Knox Lane and Casement Road. He said the commercial development would cause an increased traffic flow at the already heavily traveled intersection and children's safety.

"Any commercial develoment would be detrimental to the community and bring hazard to the children," Broderson said. "Some stores only a few blocks away were recently remodeled and are now being duplicated."

'We can't always make the popular decision," Nash said. "We try to make the best we can for the most people."

THE COMPLEX

One step beyond comedy

Sign: "The program has the wrong phone number for us. That number is a massage parlor we have not been to often."

Making anything, even a misprint on a program, into something funny is standard fare for The Complex Improvisational Theatre. Group members Rick Efros, John Winningham and Mike Musik use audience suggestions to create the scenes, characters or songs which move their brand of comedy along.

"A lot of people don't know what to think about it (improvisational comedy)," Winningham said. "People who go to comedy clubs are used to a stand-up (comedian) who batters away at them for 45 minutes. They just absorb the material.

absorb the material.

"We have our work cut out for us because we have to have an intimate relationship with the crowd, and the crowd has to be active. We pump ourselves up, pump the audience up, lock all the doors and party," he said.

The Complex began in the late 1970s as The Not Necessarily Ready for K-State Players, performing a lot of Saturday Night Live-type skits. This 12-member group changed the name to The Complex Improvisational Theatre about five years ago and has been doing improv for the last four. As the group size decreased when members began pursuing other interests, The Complex became more and more professional Winningham said.

Last fall they ended their affiliation with the University and the Department of Speech.

Efros, who received his doctorate in counseling from

K-State in July, said he's been doing comedy forever.
"When I was born, I came out and did five minutes ('Born free...my father's a doctor'...he sings). It's really funny to think I used to get sent to the principal's office for the things I do now and get paid for," Efros said.

Winningham and Musik graduated from K-State with bachelor degrees in theater. Winningham, who has always been a fan of slapstick comedy, fell into the acting and comedy bit during high school. "I can't do much else besides act, maybe dig a ditch. I'm not very good with numbers," Winningham joked.

"Actually I'm an actor," Musik said. "Improv is a vehicle to become famous. It's also a way to get stage time. The more you're on stage, the more you learn about the art and yourself."

Winningham said improvisations are created by "having one idea and then going with the flow and trusting your partner." For example, in the Complex's computer improv, Efros takes audience questions and feeds them to the computer — Winningham and Musik. They play on each other's one-word responses until a satisfactory and usually humorous answer is given.

"We have certain vehicles for our improvs. We are structured to that, but as far as what happens, we have no control," Efros explained.

one of Winningham's favorite comedy activities is the musical improv. Reggae, gospel, rock 'n roll or punk songs are created on the spot to illustrate a scene and move the musical story forward, Winningham said.

Musik said The Complex is a very "tight" group.

"We have to be. We're three people working as one, so there can't be any gaps — no dead air on stage," he said. Off stage, each member is responsible for a different part of the business. Efros is in charge of the props, Winningham is the publicity man — until the group can afford to hire a public relations firm — and Musik handles the finances.

Winningham said the group has worked "all the hot spots," such as Stanford & Sons Comedy House in Kansas City, Mo., The Comedy Works in Denver, Colo. and the Kansas State Fair. They've even done some street theater "where you really have to be sharp, or nobody will throw money into your hat," Winningham said.

The Complex is the first touring group of its kind in Kansas and has opened Manhattan to comedy, Winningham said.

"The change in the liquor laws has helped us greatly. The clubs need something different to attract the crowds and that difference is entertainment," he said. "We're ready to help."

Royals, Blue Jays to open playoffs tonight

Howser hopes to snap string of losses in playoff games

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The two things of which Dick Howser is certain:

- The winner of the best-of-seven American League playoffs between Toronto's Blue Jays and Howser's Kansas City Royals shall advance to the World Series.

Before the first pitch is thrown tonight in Canada, he shall be reminded of his curious managerial won-loss record in postseason play.

Howser's playoff record is all losses. One of the most successful field bosses in recent years, his teams in five-plus seasons have won 467 and lost 375 for a .555 winning percentage. He has never managed a team that finished lower than second.

Yet, he is 0-9 in playoff games. He guided the New York Yankees to a league-leading 103 victories and the Eastern Division title in 1980 only to see the West Division Royals managed by Jim Frey sweep in three straight.

The three-game wipeout persuaded Yankee owner George Steinbrenner to get another manager, making Howser available the next Aug. 31 when the Royals dumped Frey.

That was the year of the long player strike, and Howser got his new team straightened out from a disastrous start to win the secondhalf American League West title. They met Oakland in what was described as the mini-playoffs, and, three games later, the A's had a

Then last year the Royals took on the soon-to-be World Series champion Detroit Tigers in the AL playoffs. They lost one game 1-0. They lost another in extra innings. But the fact is they lost three straight.

Howser's done the only sensible thing and taken a humorous approach to the 0-9 stigma.

"I'm glad we're playing a best-ofseven format this year instead of best-of-five," he said. "I need all the shots at a playoff victory I can get."

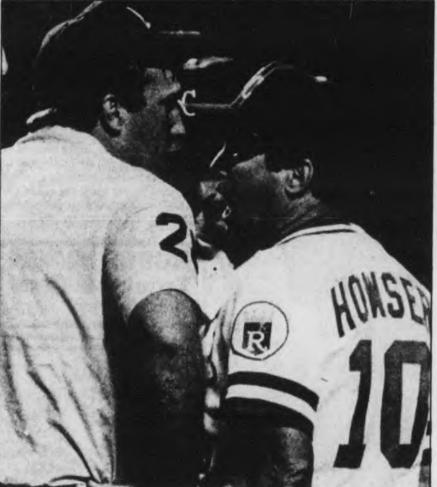

Howser is a proud man who takes his professional accomplishments seriously. He admits he has to work at keeping 0-9 talk from getting under his skin.

"I don't like to hear it, but it doesn't bother me," he said. "I could defend myself all day. But I'm not going to do it. I would just say look at the total picture, the overall record. That's the most significant thing.

"In 1981, I had a 30-game season and got us into the playoffs," he added. "I get a team I hardly know into the playoffs and all people remember is we got swept by People forget how close the three games were against Detroit last season.

"Steve Balboni hit a ball in extra innings that was about 18 inches foul or it would have been a home run," Howser noted. "And we lost a 1-0 game on a forceout when we couldn't get a double play. How close can you come? The past is history. I can't do anything about it."

Brett's late-season exploits spark Royals to division title

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - There's not a hotter hitter in the baseball playoffs than George Brett.

Kansas City's All-Star third baseman blasted five home runs in a decisive six-game span last week that saw the Royals capture their second straight American League West title. He hit .500 for the six games and drove in 11 runs, beginning with a two-run homer Sept. 30 that drew the Royals even with California.

The next game was the only one in which Brett has not homered and the Royals' lone loss of the week.

A mysterious September slump, however, may have cost the All-Star third baseman the American League's Most Valuable Player award. From Sept. 1 to Sept. 28 his average plunged from .356 to .329.

The October spurt raised him to .335 for the year, second to Boston's Wade Boggs, who hit .368. His career-high 30 home runs and 112 runs batted in trailed Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees, who clubbed his 35th home run Sunday and drove in his league-leading 144th

About midway through his torrid streak, Brett merely smiled when asked if he was making a late run at Mattingly for the MVP

"I'm not even thinking about it," he said. "I'm just thinking about trying to win the American League pennant." Brett's two-run homer Sept. 30 in the opener of a four-game showdown with California paced a 3-1 victory. The next night he did not homer, and the Angels won to regain a one-game advantage. But with Brett hitting home runs in each of the next four games, including two inside-the-parkers, the Royals won four straight and poured champagne.

Brett, 32, already has one MVP

Sigrid Ivarsson and Line 6-2, 6-2.

award on his mantel, winning in 1980 after he hit .390 and led the Royals to the American League pennant. But in many ways, this was his finest season ever. He stayed healthy, for

"Last year I didn't feel part of the team last year because I missed so many games with injury," he said.

'This year, I played in 155 games.' He came in fifth in the league with 108 runs scored, sixth with 38 doubles, third with 16 game-winning RBI and 103 walks, second with 73 extra base hits and 322 total bases and first with a .583 slugging percentage.

Perhaps the most telling blow he struck all week came Saturday night against the Oakland A's. The Royals were trailing 4-0, a bigger deficit than they had overcome all year. California had already won its game in Texas. A loss would send the race to Sunday's regular season finale.

But Brett clubbed a two-run homer to slice the deficit in half, and the Royals seemed to visibly take on a different character. They rebounded for a title-clinching 5-4 victory in 10

"Golly, that was a big hit," said Sundberg. "I knew we had a chance then. There's not too many people who can do that at will. It was like the team needed it, and he did it. He tried to hit it out and he did.'

Brett's effect on his team did not escape Oakland Manager Jackie Moore.

"He comes up and hits a two-run homer," said Moore, "and I, as the opposing manager, look over into their dugout and I see everybody come alive. He just picked his club up and made it come to life."

Moore agrees that Mattingly would be the betting favorite for the MVP. "But he had a lot more help around him than Brett had," he said. "Not to put anybody down, but nobody carried their ballclub this year like George Brett did."

Teams 'built around pitching' open series'

By The Associated Press

The Kansas City Royals, the last team to break the American League West jinx, will try to do it again while the Los Angeles Dodgers, the last team to stop John Tudor, face the same task when baseball's playoffs begin with a new best-of-seven format.

Tonight, the AL playoffs begin in Toronto, where the Blue Jays will try to bring the first World Series to Canada. The National League playoffs begin Wednesday night in Los Angeles when the Dodgers play host to the St. Louis Cardinals. Pitching often dominates the postseason, and all four teams are well-equipped.

The Dodgers lead the majors in team earned run average and St. Louis ranks second in the NL. Toronto's staff ranks No. 1 in the AL, followed by Kansas City.

"Both teams are built around their pitching," says left-hander Jimmy Key of Toronto, who will pitch Game 2 on Wednesday. "The best pitching depth should make a big difference."

The Royals are the last AL West team to win the AL playoffs, having beaten the New York Yankees in 1980. Other than Oakland in 1972-73-74, no West team has won the league crown since divisional play began in 1969.

Dave Stieb, 14-13, will start for Toronto in Game 1 against Kansas City's Charlie Leibrandt, 17-9.

Kansas City won the season series from Toronto seven games to five. The NL series also features some pretty hot pitchers. And no one in baseball is as hot as Tudor, who has won 20 of his last 21 decisions for the Cardinals. Tudor, 21-8 and leading the majors with 10 shutouts, will pitch Game 1 against Fernando Valenzuela, 17-10. Valenzuela and the Dodgers are the only team to have beaten Tudor since May 29. Valenzuela shut out St. Louis 3-0 on three hits on July 20.

"The way he has pitched, they're capable of beating anybody," said Los Angeles Manager Tommy Lasorda, whose team won seven of 12 against St. Louis this season. "But I think we're the team to beat."

Soccer club gains first win of year

The K-State Soccer Club gained its first victory of the season Saturday, downing the Central Missouri State University Mules 3-0. The game was played in Wamego as part of an Oktoberfest celebration.

The Wildcats scored their first goal on a looping header by Kevin Umidon. Early in the second half, Rob Healy gave K-State a 2-0 advantage by scoring off an assist from Umidon. K-State's final goal of the game came when Umidon scored on an assist from Mike

The next game for the squad will be against Wichita State University Saturday at 2 p.m. in Memorial Stadium.

The Wildcat "B" team also gained a win Saturday, defeating World Record Spec from the Topeka League, 4-1. Goals were scored by John Bugler, Jaime Lopez, Steve Lyons and Ben McLean. The team lost 1-0 Sunday to the Vanna White Fan Club team. K-State's womens' team defeated Wichita State 6-3 on Saturday, but it lost to Creighton University 6-1 on Sunday.

Tennis teams' success limited

The K-State men's and women's tennis teams both saw action this past weekend, with the men hosting the University of Oklahoma and the women playing in the University of Kansas Invitational.

The men won two of nine matches in their dual with the Sooners. No. 1 singles player Deon Botha defeated Mark Collins 6-4, 6-4 for K-State's lone singles victory of the dual.

Botha also teamed with Kris James in K-State's only other win - a 7-5, 2-6, 6-3 victory over Olivier Corin and Warren Diamond. In the women's tournament, No. 1 singles player Lena Svensson paced the 'Cats for the second straight week. Svensson advanced to the semi-finals before losing to KU's Tracy Treps 6-4, 6-4. To reach the semi-finals, Svensson beat KU's Susie Berglund 6-1, 6-0 and Barb Inman 7-5, 6-2. In the consolation singles bracket, Kristy Line advanced to the semi-finals where she fell to Wichita State's Clare Baldwin 6-3, 6-1. K-State dominated the consolation doubles bracket, sending two teams into the finals. Judy Miller teamed with Svensson to defeat

An "incredible" defensive stand by K-State Rugby Club's collegiate team helped the 'Cats to a 9-7 win over the University of Kansas collegiate rugby team Saturday at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Area intramural fields

The Jayhawks had the ball inside the 'Cats' 22-meter line for most of the last 10 minutes of the game, but they were never able to score.

"It was incredible defense," said K-State Rugby Club president David Todd. "We had a good defensive stand. I'm sure they (KU) were annoyed that they didn't score."

At about the two-minute mark, a Jayhawk player was in the process of being tackled when he attempted to release the ball to a teammate (when tackled, a player must get rid of the ball). K-State was able to get control of the ball and run out the clock.

"They just kept running at us, and we tackled them," Todd said of the late defensive stand. A penalty kick by K-State's Bill Knopick early in the first half staked the 'Cats to a 3-0 lead. Kansas struck back quickly, though, when Pete Knutson scored a try from 50 meters.

A try, which is analagous to a touchdown in football, is scored by grounding the ball in the opponent's The try, worth four points, gave

KU the lead by one point. Knutson, also KU's kicker, missed the conversion kick which would have extended the lead to 6-3. Just before halftime, K-State regained the lead as the scrum (a formation of forwards) scored a push-over try from 5 meters. Steve Duncan got the score and Knopick made the conversion kick to put the 'Cats up 9-4 at the half.

The second half proved to be a defensive struggle with the only score being a penalty kick from KU's Knutson to cut K-State's lead to 9-7. The Jayhawks, however, were unable to score again as the K-State defense took over.

K-State wing Rod Hollingsworth and prop Brian Aldrich both suffered shoulder injuries in the game. A prop is the player at the front of a scrum.

Filling in for Hollingsworth and Aldrich were rookies Jeff Luchtefeld and Russ Warren.

The win moved the 'Cats' record to 5-2 and 3-0 in collegiate play. Collegiate team members must be college students, while the club team may include non-students.

K-State's victory over KU gave the 'Cats the First Lady of Kansas Rugby Cup, which normally goes to the winner of the club competition. But because K-State has just a few non-student players on the club team, the competition for the cup was changed to the collegiate teams this year.

Koplik encouraged the committee to consider non-traditional candidates for the vacancy. "The committee must keep its mind open to identify other characteristics and strengths that make a person a successful candidate."

Koplik also cited the importance of maintaining a good relationship with the media during the search process. One of Chairman Frieman's major responsibilities will be to serve as a liaison, or official spokesperson, for the committee.

Although the committee is currently without a budget allowance, Koplik said $25,000 from the Kansas Legislature will probably be approv-

Lowest-paid instructor in U.S. could lose job

By The Associated Press

McLEOD, N.D. — A woman who gained fame as the nation's lowest-paid teacher may have to find a new job if declining attendance prompts the closure of a one-room school where she also works as cook and janitor.

"It's going to be awfully hard to see them board this place up," said Janice Herbranson. "It's been such a big part of my life and the lives of so many people in this area."

Herbranson, 51, was featured in the national news media in October 1983 after the National Education Association reported her to be the nation's lowest-paid teacher at an annual salary of $6,800.

"The whole thing is pretty hard to believe," said Herbranson, who also received a personal letter from President Reagan, which she displays in a gold frame on the wall of the McLeod school.

A decade ago, the school bustled with the activity of 16 students. Now there are only three, and it's likely the school will close its doors next spring after 103 years.

Herbranson has not yet negotiated her 1985-86 contract with the McLeod School Board, but said she believed her salary will again be about $6,800.

Earlier this year, she sold the rights to her life story to a California filmmaker who plans to make it into a movie. The script won't have to add much fiction to make the story unusual.

For one thing, Herbranson is not only the teacher in a one-room school, she co-owns McLeod's only bar — the Sand Dune Saloon, an Old West-style bar that caters to the area's farmers and farmworkers.

For another, she is a recovering alcoholic.

Herbranson said she turned to liquor more than 10 years ago after the deaths of her husband, Stanley, and her 14-year-old son, Dean, the youngest of her three sons.

Stanley Herbranson died in a 1971 airplane crash near McLeod, and her son perished in 1974 when a fire swept through the family's farm home.

"It was absolutely the worst time of my life," she said. "I had no control and no strength. After all I've done, it's a wonder I'm even here to talk about it."

After her son's death, she moved to Fargo where she worked as a cook and a bartender for about four years. In 1979, she returned to McLeod and resumed teaching but did not quit drinking, she said.

"Some people may think otherwise, but I don't think it ever affected my teaching ability," Herbranson said.

She turned to Alcoholics Anonymous for help in 1980 and has has been sober ever since, save for one relapse on Christmas Day 1980, she said.

McLeod school board president Iles Olerud said a final decision on the 1986-87 school year will be made in the spring. Two of the school's three students graduate in the spring and will attend school elsewhere next year.

In the meantime, Herbranson, who has five grandchildren, is considering an offer to teach in Dillingham, Alaska.

"I've always wanted to go overseas, but it's so far. Maybe going to Alaska would be a good first step," she said

Agriculture students to participate

Conference to help clubs' motivation

By MIKE ROBBINS Collegian Reporter

The Agriculture Student Council is sponsoring an Ag Leadership Conference for all agriculture clubs Oct. 12.

The purpose of the conference is to help the 25 agriculture clubs become motivated and to help members of each club set goals for themselves and their clubs, said Michelle Beniot, sophomore in agricultural economics and chairperson of the conference.

"We want to help each club represented take a good look at their strengths — what it is they really do well, and we also would like them to take a look at what they might consider to be their weaknesses. Then we want them to understand what they can do about their weaknesses," Benoit said.

The leadership conference will be a time for officers of each club to get together and plan some activities for this year, Beniot said. Participants will also have the opportunity to reflect on what their individual club has accomplished in the last year.

Larry Erpelding, associate director of the College of Agriculture, serves as advisor to the Agriculture Student Council.

"We have very strong organizations in the College of Agriculture, but I always think there is room for improvement. Some clubs have strengths in certain areas whereas other clubs may not be strong in those areas. So the leadership conference is a good opportunity to share ideas," Erpelding said.

Beniot said the idea for the conference originated with the Agriculture Student Council. "The Ag Council sat down and looked at the purpose of the agriculture clubs and thought about how the clubs helped students," Benoit said. She said the Council believed a leadership conference would be a "positive way in which to motivate the clubs and to help each club set goals."

The Agriculture Student Council's goal is to sponsor a conference which will help clubs set some goals and to help the participants look at the direction their club is headed as far as helping the student in the long run, Benoit said.

Benoit expects all 25 agriculture clubs will be represented because many of the club presidents are requiring all their officers to attend the Saturday conference.

The conference begins at 9:00 a.m., Oct. 12 in Throckmorton Hall, 132. Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture, will give the welcome followed by a workshop on recognizing a group's strengths and weaknesses given by Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for Student Affairs assistant vice president for Student Affairs.

Benoit said after the workshop on strengths and weaknesses, the participants will attend three workshops on fund raising, increasing membership and goal setting.

Sam Brownback, former FFA vice president and instructor in agricultural economics, will give a speech to end the conference.

"I hope the participants will come away from the leadership conference with more enthusiasm and ambition for their clubs," Benoit said. "After attending the conference, I hope they are ready to go back to their clubs to work hard and accomplish a little bit more than they have before."

Group plans teen drinking alternatives

By BOB SCHEIBLER Collegian Reporter

Drinking alternatives for Manhattan teens were discussed by members of the Little Apple Task Force during a Monday night meeting in the Manhattan High School Little Theater.

The objective of the group is to explore some of the possibilities open to the community which would provide entertaining alternatives to drinking. Three plans were presented during a panel discussion and question and answer session.

The first of the three plans is to further utilize the Douglass Community Center, 901 Yuma St., already in operation. A second alternative, presented by Russell Disberger, junior in business administration, was a non-alcoholic bar catering to high school students. The third option is a series of dances on Friday and Saturday nights.

The panel discussion was conducted by a group of seven: Terry DeWeese, director of Manhattan Parks and Recreation Commission; Terry Arthur, parent of a Manhattan High student; Disberger; Janice

"By admitting that there are no simple solutions to the problem, that it is something that we all have to work on, I think that maybe we are on the right track. We need to examine the real problem and come to agreement of what the problem is and come to an agreement of what the real solutions are," Lindamood

All of the options presented have the same basic objective — finding some place for the youth of Manhattan free of the influence of alcohol and drugs.

"I'm not trying to live in the past, but one of the things that I want to propose is what Manhattan used to call Teen-Town," Arthur said. "It was held in municipal auditorium and was held on every Friday night. It was sponsored by the Lions Club."

Teen-town was run by students, they made the policies and they dealt with any problems under the guidance of the supervisors.

Treasury juggles books to prevent insolvency

By The Associated Press

Kansas State University

WASHINGTON - The Treasury Department used some creative bookkeeping Tuesday to keep the government afloat while Senate leaders spun their parliamentary wheels over a balanced budget plan that has stalled action on increasing federal borrowing authority.

At the same time, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said Congress is in its current fix because of insane administration economic policies

In what has become a daily letter updating Congress on the government's effort to keep balancing itself on a fiscal precipice, Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard G. Darman told Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole,

"As of this morning, we project an ending balance for October 8 (Tuesday) of zero; and - absent remedial action - a negative ending balance for October 9 (Wednesday)."

Dole said the Treasury was juggling its books to maintain solvency into Wednesday. "We're advised today by the Treasury that they may be able to avoid default until tomorrow sometime," he said.

So far, the only sign of the government's financial problems has been the series of letter from the Treasury Department to Con-

Palestinian pirates held more than 400 people under their guns on an Italian cruise ship Tuesday in the eastern Mediterranean, vowing to kill them unless Israel frees 50 prisoners.

There were reports that the hijackers said they killed two American passengers. But port officials in Beirut, Lebanon said they monitored a radio call in which a man identifying himself as Achille Lauro's captain insisted that everyone aboard was in good condition and pleaded: "Please, please, don't try anything on my ship.

The Palestinian hijackers were reported to have a large supply of explosives, and said soon after seizing the ship Monday night that they would blow it up if military air or naval forces tried to interfere. Flotta Lauro, the shipping line, said 413 people were aboard, including 331 crew members.

The Italian government said it would not give in to "terrorist blackmail," and also said that the hijackers "seem" to be demanding freedom for prisoners in Italy and other countries. Judicial sources have said 13 Palestinian terrorists and suspects are jailed in Italy.

Most of the Americans who had been on the Achille Lauro cruise were among about 600 passengers who disembarked in Alexandria, Egypt, before the Palestinians seized the ship about 30 miles west of Port Said. Reports indicated about a dozen Americans still were aboard.

Western diplomats in Damascus said the Syrian Foreign Ministry told Italian Charge d'Affaires Pietro Cordone the hijackers claimed to have killed two Americans. "We have no confirmation," said one diplomat, who spoke on condition

The ship sailed west from the Syrian coast after it was denied access to Syrian territorial waters outside the port of Tartus, a diplomat reported. A Western diplomat in Damascus said it was bound for Cyprus, and Beirut port officials said it was in international waters off the coast of Cyprus. But a Cypriot government source said the ship would not be allowed to dock

In an earlier radio conversation with Beirut port authorities, the hijack gang's leader demanded negotiations with Israel. He shouted: "We will hit any ship, any plane that tries to approach us! This is Omar, the hijacker of the Italian ship. I want to speak to Beirut port authorities."

Committee to review suggestions

By The Collegian Staff

The University Presidential Search Committee wants to hear the ideas of all campus groups concerning desired presidential qualifications, said Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology and chairman of the committee.

The committee will sponsor an open forum Tuesday from 8 to 10 a.m. in the Union Forum Hall. Any faculty, staff or student will be allowed to speak, but will be limited to 3 minutes to give everyone a chance to

In order to ensure all groups have an opportunity to address the committee, the following schedule will be followed: committee introduction, 8 to 8:05 a.m.; classified employees, 8:05 to 8:30 a.m.; students, 8:30 to 8:55 a.m.; break, 8:55-9:05 a.m.; 9:05 to 9:30 a.m.; open to all, 9:30 to 10

"It will be on a first come, first served basis, but if time is left over speakers can return to speaking if they were cut off after 3 minutes," Frieman said.

"We're here to listen, not to tell what qualifications we want in a president," Frieman said. "Anyone can come and listen, or they can write committee members" about nominations or suggestions for presi-

The search committee was instructed by the Kansas Board of Regents at their first meeting Monday to present a list of three to five candidates for the position of University president on or before April 1. The regents will make the final selection for the presidency.

Doug Steele, junior in mechanical engineering, makes his way through the pylon course in the Championship Tuesday. The competition consists of driving through the course for the best West Stadium parking lot in an attempt to make the finals in the National Collegiate Driving elapsed time.

Students battle elements in driving competition

By The Collegian Staff

Despite 50-mph winds on Monday and rain on Tuesday, the National Collegiate Driving Championships campus competition drew 502 contestants.

The contest challenged students to drive a 1986 Dodge Daytona Turbo Z through a winding course about three-tenths of a mile long and marked by pylons. The drivers were given one trial run through the course. On their second run through the course they were clocked and one second was added to the time for each pylon knocked down.

Scott Kirkham, sophomore in computer science, won the competition with a time of 14.604. Second place went to Scott Stewart, senior in accounting, 14.626; and in third place was Terry Karst, senior in engineering technology, 14.864.

Kirkham said he entered the competition with no idea he would win. "I figured it would be a chance to have some fun," he said. "I live in the Pi Kappa Phi house and I went in during dinner tonight, and they all stood up and clapped for me - it was pretty neat.

"I drive a 1977 Olds Cutlass automatic, so I don't really have a way to practice," he said.

David Bruton, freshman in preforestry, who completed the course with a time of 16.147 seconds, said that other than the fact that his head hit the ceiling because of the helmet, the competition was fun.

"I wish I could have gone a lot faster. If I had practiced a little bit more I could have," Bruton said.

Kirkham will receive round-trip airfare and hotel accommodations in Daytona Beach, Fla., during spring break to compete in the Grand

The first place winner of the national competition will receive a $5,000 scholarship, second place a $3,000 scholarship and third place will receive a $2,000 scholarship. Each national winner will also receive the use of the Dodge Daytona Turbo Z for one year.

The contest was sponsored locally by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and Pi Tau Sigma. The national sponsors were Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co.; Unocal, a division of Union 76 Oil Co.; Ocean Pacific Sportswear;

USA Today; Champion Spark Plug; and ANCO, a division of Champion Oil Co.

The contest was conducted to promote safe driving, to teach the importance of safety restraints and to warn students against drinking and driving, said Melody Wicht, of Boca Ratone, Fla., events manager of the championships.

Wicht said two teams travel throughout the United States conducting the contest. One team travels east of the Mississippi River and the other travels west of the Mississippi.

Kansas exam may be viable alternative

Official advises change in teacher test

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The main portion of Kansas' teacher certification examination should be a test generally given to students when they enter education programs in college, the State Board of Education was told

David McDonald, an assistant to state education commissioner, told the board that the National Educational Testing Service's Pre-Professional Skills Test should be used in place of an examination selected earlier, much of which has been ruled invalid.

The tests were mandated under a 1984 law for all graduates of teacher training programs who want to be certified in Kansas after May 1, 1986.

The National Teachers Examination Core Battery originally was selected as the precertification test but a University of Kansas consultant told the 10-member board last month that four sections of that exam would not be valid to measure skills of prospective teachers in the Questions on the Pre-Professional Skills Test originally were taken from NTE Core Battery test but cover only reading, writing and mathematics, said Edward Masonis, a program administrator for educational testing service.

Under the new precertification test proposal, a professional knowlege section from the NTE Core Battery would be retained but, in accordance with the KU consultant's suggestions, some of the questions in the section would be eliminated.

The consultant, John Poggio, the director of the Center for Educational Testing and Evaluation at KU, told the board that studies had ruled invalid portions of the NTE Core Battery which covered listening, social studies, literature and

The only sections of the core battery exam that were ruled valid in Poggio's studies were reading, writing and mathematics - the same subjects covered by the preprofessional test.

However, officials said applicants for teaching certificates would have to take the entire sixhour core battery exam so the results of the selected sections would be considered valid. After hearing Poggio's report, the board last month asked the Department of Education staff to come up with an alternative.

McDonald said that although studies will have to be conducted to ensure that questions on the preprofessional test are similar to those ruled valid on the core battery exam, the only significant research remaining before the tests are approved for use would be to determine the passing scores. Board member Bill Musick, of Minneapolis, said he was not happy about the possibility of giving a certification test that covered much of the same material a student is expected to know upon entering an education program.

Bicycle mishap causes student's critical injury

By The Collegian Staff

Michael A. Newton, graduate in physics, was listed in critical condition Tuesday after suffering injuries in a bicycle accident at the Jardine Terrace recreational field Monday evening.

Newton, 24, was apparently using his bicycle to jump mounds of dirt on the field, said Lt. Robert Mellgren of the KSU Police Department.

Tom Rokey, senior in feed science and management, said he witnessed the accident from his balcony at Jardine Terrace.

Rokey reported that he saw Newton riding his bicycle down the sidewalk at a high speed, then Newton veered off into the grass where he hit a landscaped hill about 5 feet high.

When Newton did not get up, Rokey went to the scene of the accident and found Newton lying face down gasping. Rokey said he tried to arouse Rokey by yelling at him, but could not get a response. He then called a Riley County ambulance. Campus police were called to the scene of the accident at 6:23 p.m.

The ambulance took Newton to The St. Mary Hospital. About an hour later he was transferred to Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka. Officials at Stormont-Vail said

Newton sustained a head injury and was in critical condition.

"It was a very freak accident," said KSU Police Department Chief Charles Beckom,. "If it had been another minute in another day's time, it wouldn't have happened.'

Newton is from Kansas City, Kan. Both he and Rokey are residents of Jardine Terrace. Rokey said he was not previously acquainted with Newton.

"It's hard to believe it happened in a bicycle accident," Rokey said.

Party leader commemorates march

PEKING - Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang marked the 50th anniversary of the Long March by walking, riding horseback and driving along the route of the Red Army's 1934-35 flight from the Nationalist Chinese

The state-run television news and the Xinhua news agency said General Secretary Hu, No. 1 in party rank but second in command to paramount leader Deng Xiaoping, made the trip Sept. 26-Oct. 5.

Mao Tse-tung and about 100,000 members of his guerrilla army set off on the 6,000-mile march from southeast China to the edge of Tibet and north to Shaanxi province. They were in flight from Nationalist forces led by Chiang Kai-shek.

Only about 7,000, including Hu himself, made it to safety in the caves of Yenan.

Many who did, including Mao, the late Premier Chou En-lai and Deng, were to lead the nation after the Communists defeated Chiang's army in the civil war. The Nationalists reached the offshore island of Taiwan, which they have held since.

Kidnappers release British hostages

BEIRUT, Lebanon - Two British women who were kidnapped in Moslem west Beirut 13 days ago, were released Tuesday. They appeared shaken, but apparently unharmed.

The women, 28-year-old Amanda McGrath, a teacher at the American University of Beirut's intensive English program, and Hazel Moss, 45, a former restaurant manager, were freed near the Commodore Hotel in Moslem west Beirut late in the evening.

Associated Press reporters who saw the women said they showed no obvious signs of having been physically mistreated. Both immediately called their families in England.

"I am fine. We've just been released," McGrath told her father. "I am well and I even gained weight. I wasn't hurt."

The two said they did not know who their captors were. Still missing since March 1984 are a British journalist and 11 other Westerners, all men, kidnapped in west Beirut. Six are Americans, four are French and one is Italian.

The Moslem group that has claimed responsibility for holding the American and French hostages, Islamic Jihad or Islamic Holy War, said last Wednesday that one of the Americans, U.S. Embassy employee William Buckley, was killed in while a captive.

Fourteen other foreigners have been kidnapped and released since January 1984, and two others have been found slain.

Police trustees protesting apartheid

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Trustees of two Kansas City Police Department pension funds have voted to go along with the City Council's policy of gradual withdrawal of investments from companies that do business with South Africa.

The seven-member board that took the action Monday administers two retirement funds with assets of about $100 million - nearly $17 million of it invested in companies doing business in South Africa.

The City Council adopted a resolution in August protesting the "institutional subjugation and dehumanization" of South Africa's nonwhite majority. The resolution called for pension boards to seek other investment opportunities "comparable in quality but alternative to" South African-related investments.

Two of the city's biggest retirement funds — the Kansas City Firefighters Pension System and the Employees Retirement System agreed earlier to follow the City Council's recommendations.

The three combined retirement funds for police, firefighters and other employees have about $68.6 million invested in South Africa.

Committee suggests damage limits

TOPEKA - A bitterly divided committee created by Insurance Commissioner Fletcher Bell voted Tuesday to recommend the Legislature limit damage judgments in medical malpractice lawsuits to $500,000, and to abolish punitive damages entirely in malpractice

Attorney members of the committee strongly attacked the halfmillion dollar cap placed on damage awards, but had their criticism tempered somewhat when the committee later voted to exempt from the limitation future payments for medical and custodial care for victims of medical malpractice.

The latter proposal, offered by Paul Fleener, lobbyist for the Kansas Farm Bureau, as a middle ground between doctors on the panel who wanted a flat cap and lawyers who wanted no cap, carried on a 13-12 vote. Former Gov. John Anderson Jr., chairman of the Bell committee, voted for Fleener's proposal to break a tie which would have defeated it.

The motion to recommend the $500,000 cap had passed, 17-7, while a motion to make the cap $1 million failed, 10-11.

The 1985 Legislature changed state law to limit punitive damages to $3 million in a single case, but the Bell committee voted to abolish them altogether in medical malpractice cases. A motion to recommend abolishing punitive damages in all cases in Kansas failed, 10-11.

House approves farm bill package

WASHINGTON — The House approved a 1985 farm bill Tuesday that pins hopes for recovery of the U.S. agricultural economy on increased export sales, and in the meantime offers a safety net of farm income guarantees.

The vote was 282 to 141.

The five-year, $141 billion bill includes price supports for major crops such as wheat, corn, cotton, rice and soybeans; a new soil conservation package; money for agricultural extension and research; and new statutory authority for food stamps and overseas food aid.

The Senate is not scheduled to act on its version of the bill until next week at the earliest. Prolonged House-Senate negotiations appear likely before a final measure can be sent to President Reagan. In its key elements - crop price supports and farm income subsidies - the House bill retains the essential structure of current farm

It continues to offer farmers loans on their crops to allow them to wait for the most advantageous time to sell, and bolsters income through direct payments that make up the difference between the price farmers receive and a pre-set "target price."

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, said the bill reflected a congressional consensus that ought to "let the farmers of America know we stand up

Rep. Arlan Stangeland, R-Minn., who had favored a more unorthodox approach to solving farm economic problems, called it "a warmed-over 1981 farm bill."

Researchers will use lime in waters

AMHERST, Mass. - Researchers plan to study whether lime can be added to streams to help protect them against acid rain as part of a 10-year study.

Lime, which neutralizes the acid, is now being added to about 35 lakes and ponds statewide to slow acidification.

Scientists have not attempted before now to add lime to flowing waters because streams quickly flush it out, said Paul Godfrey, director of the Acid Rain Monitoring Project at the University of

He said researchers, who plan to add lime to Whetstone Brook in Wendell, will solve that problem by constructing a device which would slowly deposit the lime into the stream at regular intervals.

Acid rain is precipitation with a high concentration of acids from sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxide and other chemical emissions in the air from burning of fossil fuels.

Several protest sex therapist's visit

STILLWATER, Okla. - Protests by one state lawmaker, two dozen parents and a fundamentalist minister didn't deter sex therapist Ruth Westheimer from preaching her philosophy to a sell-out audience at Oklahoma State University.

At a news conference following her lecture, Westheimer declined to specifically address the protests to her visit.

"I spoke as explicitly as I would speak anywhere," she said. In her talk, Westheimer said she wanted to dispel sexual myths. She said she deplores irresponsible sexual activity.

University officials said at least two dozen parents and a state legislator had called or written letters protesting the scheduled appearance of the therapist, who is an author and a regular commentator on radio and television.

Billy Joe Clegg, a fundamentalist Baptist minister from Shawnee and announced candidate for governor, vowed to place Westheimer under citizen's arrest should she publicly condone sodomy, which is illegal in Oklahoma. After the speech, he tried to approach her but was escorted away by security guards.

Redgrave wants return of $100,000

BOSTON - Lawyers for actress Vanessa Redgrave have asked the U.S. 1st Circuit Court of Appeals to restore the $100,000 a jury awarded her for damages allegedly done to her career after the Boston Symphony Orchestra canceled an appearance by her.

"It's a serious wrong when someone is fired for her political beliefs," Daniel J. Kornstein, an attorney for Redgrave, told a panel of three judges Monday.

Redgrave was not present.

The actress sued the orchestra after it canceled her 1982 appearance to narrate "Oedipus Rex" because of complaints about her sympathy for the Palestine Liberation Organization. A federal jury awarded her $27,500 - the amount of her contract - and $100,000 for the damage allegedly done to her career by the But U.S. District Judge Robert Keeton set aside the $100,000 award, saying that damage to Redgrave's career was legally irrelevant under breach of contract law and that the orchestra never intended to violate the actress' civil rights.

The Men of Tau Kappa Epsilon would like to congratulate these outstanding players who have been selected to participate in the 1985 Powder Puff All-Star Classic.

Regents will review faculty legislation

By MARGARET MAY Collegian Reporter

The Board of Regents will discuss on Oct. 18 a resolution presented by Faculty Senate seeking to add three faculty and three student members to the Presidential Search Committee, said Charles Reagan, faculty senate president, Tuesday at its monthly meeting.

If the regents pass the resolution, Reagan said, faculty senate will have a special meeting Oct. 24 to prepare a list of possible candidates.

Concern was expressed, initially by Eugene Friedmann, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, about a questionnaire being distributed across campus. The questionnaire came with a cover letter from President Duane Acker asking that the questionnaire be filled out and returned by faculty, students and alumni

"I learned this did not come from Hoyt's (assistant provost) office Survey concerns Faculty Senate and that it is for a Ph.D. dissertation for someone in the College of Education," Friedmann said.

James Isch, budget director in the University budget office, is the student doing the questionnaire. In a phone interview Tuesday night, Isch said he knew of no specific reason Acker did not clarify the questionnaire was for a disserta-

"What I am looking at is consensus in groups as to what kind of priority (in instructional programs such as agriculture, business administration and engineering) Kansas State should put emphasis on," he said.

"I got a letter from Duane Acker that was misleading - pure and simple, said Bob Smith, professor in civil engineering. "(Acker) should collect (the questionnaires) and give them back or burn them. I intend to ask for mine back."

"There was no malicious intent." said Isch, "nothing in anything that is produced will put one program over another.'

Mark Jones, senior in management and student senate chairman, said he understood the purpose of the questionnaire was to tell what student leaders felt the University's priorities should be. 'My understanding is that President Acker asked him (Isch) to do

Jones said he did not know the questionnaire was for a dissertation but wasn't concerned. The biggest complaint the senators had was they didn't feel qualified to answer questions about colleges. The questionnaire does contain a question asking the respondent whether he or she believes they are qualified (from very qualified to not at all qualified) to comment on colleges they are not informed about, Jones said.

In other business, at the Sept. 26 Executive Committee meeting, the Faculty Affairs committee reported that the faculty handbooks are being reviewed before distribu-

Reagan announced that Jerome Frieman, professor of psychology, has been elected chairman of the Presidential Search Committee.

Frieman said an open forum, scheduled for Oct. 15, will be conducted for all students and faculty who wish to comment on the presidential search. The forum will occur from 8 a.m. to noon in Union Forum Hall. Job descriptions for the president's position will be sent to each faculty member, he said. Committee meetings will be open unless the committee is screening candidates

acquisition ordinances

Three ordinances authorizing acquisition of properties for the Downtown Redevelopment Project by eminent domain were approved by commissioners at a special meeting of the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday afternoon.

Gary Stith, community development coordinator, said eight of the properties have received all required appraisals and redevelopment 'can't move any further until something is initiated.

By COLLEEN WILSON

Staff Writer

Properties affected by the first reading of the ordinance include businesses in the 100 and 200 blocks of Poyntz Avenue and 200 block of Humboldt Street.

In other action regarding downtown redevelopment, Jerry Petty, city engineer, reviewed bids for a contract to provide improvements on Leavenworth Street. Improvements are to include widening and repaving of the 200 and 300 blocks of Leavenworth Street and from Fourth Street to Tuttle Creek Boulevard. Commissioners approved the contract by a vote of 5-0.

Ruth Schrum, 720 Midland Ave., asked if the project would cause Leavenworth Street to be closed at any time. She said her properties in the 300 block of the street need continous access and she had not received notice the contract would affect Petty said a notice will be sent out to all property owners affected by the project. He said the street will remain open during the improvements until asphalting begins, which will require closing the street for "about a week." For residential areas which don't have access to an alley during this time, a different type of fastsetting concrete, allowing access after one day, will be used.

Petty said three of the 13 residents and businesses affected by the project have been notified. He also said because the project is protected under the Leavenworth Street rightof-way, the city isn't required to consult with businesses and residents prior to consideration by the city commission.

Other action at the meeting included acceptance of offers allowing acquisition three properties for the Downtown Redevelopment Project. A total of 34 of the 75 properties affected by the project have been acquired by negotiation. In closing, commission members decided ground breaking for the mall should be celebrated, but not to have a formal celebration of the wrecking ball to businesses. "It would be like celebrating an execution," Fiser said. Looking for an apartment?

Soviets violate bilateral grain contract

By RUSTIN HAMILTON Agriculture Editor

After 10 years of successful grain negotiations with the United States, the Soviet Union has finally left the U.S. holding the bag.

The bilateral grain agreement, a proposal developed by the U.S. government requiring the Soviets to purchase a set amount of wheat and corn every year, was violated during the fiscal year 1985 for the first time in the agreement's three year history, said Jim Bair, marketing specialist for the Kansas Wheat Commission.

The agreement required the Soviets to buy 4 million metric tons of both corn and wheat every year for the duration of the contract - five years. Such negotiations have been taking place for 10 years, thus far without problems, Bair said.

"Most people were really confident that the Soviets would fulfill the agreement in the last minute," Bair said. By holding out, the Soviets could have easily expected lower grain prices at the end of the fiscal year. Prices did not drop, however, and the U.S. government was surprised when the Soviet's did not fulfill the agreement, he said.

Even though the Soviets failed to meet the wheat purchasing requirements in 1985, they helped make up for it when they bought four times the amount of corn they had agreed to, Bair said.

'The Soviets have increased their wheat production by around 15 percent this last year and just don't need the wheat they had originally agreed to," Bair said. "Corn, on the other hand, is very difficult to grow in their climate, therefore they import almost all they will need. Since they need the corn so bad, they also agreed to buy the wheat. That's basically how the bilateral agreement works."

Because of the corn buying spree by the Soviets, the U.S. government has been more passive about the under-purchasing of wheat last year,

"Kansas has probably felt the blow (the under-purchasing) as much or more than any other state. The Soviets will only buy hard red winter wheat, and most of that comes from Kansas," Bair said.

Through the summer of 1984, the Soviets blessed the U.S. with a huge buying surge, purchasing 6.3 million metric tons of wheat between June 1984 and May 1985. In the 1985 fiscal year, however, only 2.9 million metric tons were purchased between Oct. 1, 1984 and Sept. 30, 1985, Bair

Even though the USSR has decreased their purchases in the U.S. wheat market, they will still remain the world's major importer, with purchases expected to be more than 20 million metric tons in 1985-1986 far less than the 28.3 million meteric tons purchased last year, according to the Kansas Wheat Commission.

The bilateral grain agreement with the Soviets, based on a five year contract, has two years remaining and is not subject to change concerning the minumum purchase agreement established three years ago.

Academic, athletic goals

University administrators, alumni, coaches, athletes and other supporters of big-time intercollegiate athletics are losing sight of the primary objective of higher education.

Too often, high rollers involved in college athletics assist academically gifted athletes as well as those who are not - to ease the burden of eligibility requirements by accepting substandard classwork and adding non-existent classes to transcripts.

Some believe the needs of an athlete are different from nonathletic students. They would like to see the creation of vocational and intercollegiate athletic degrees to permit academic cheaters to come out of the closet.

The justification for reducing academic standards is that students training to become professional athletes are unnecessarily forced to meet stantheir career aspirations.

However, curtailing academic standards for athletes is not a viable solution. The implementation of any program allowing athletes to not compete in the classroom with their peers would deny athletes a quality education mind. and pervert the educational process.

Perhaps 1 percent or 2 percent of all collegiate athletes reach the professional level; to cheapen the value of a college education for the sake of a few is unnecessary.

Universities are created to develop and transmit knowledge. The reason students attend college should be to satisify the pursuit of wisdom — not God-like speed or the perfect jumpshot.

Granted, it is difficult to balance preparation for a major college sports season with classes at a major university. But the challenge for members of the debate squad, agriculture judging teams, singing, theater and band groups is much the same. Extra-curricular activities are just that - involvements that require greater individual dedication and sacrifice.

The bottom line is that athletes, if granted the opportunity to participate in collegiate athletics, must also accept the idea that dards having little to do with they must sharpen their academic skills as well.

Until sports participants and fans alter their thinking and make education the No. 1 priority, students will be cheated by a system intent on developing the perfect body and not the perfect

Inaction to affect workers

Once again, the United States government is broke.

Despite Saturday and Sunday sessions by the U.S. Senate, a measure to increase the debt ceiling for the United States which would have provided funds for general government expenses was not acted upon.

The main roadblock to action is an amendment from the Reagan administration, which outlines a five-year plan to achieve a balanced budget. Another problem has been the president's refusal to accept even a temporary, short-term solution.

Without an increased debt allowance, Treasury officials have said the government will go broke and lose the ability to meet financial obligations — such as payroll and Social Security checks - after Monday.

Tuesday morning it was reported the Treasury department, in an effort to put pressure on the Senate for action, may order banks not to honor government checks.

Senate Majority Leader Robert between the president and Senate leaders may be the best method to get a bill through - meaning a balanced-budget bill, of course.

With the Reagan balancedbudget proposal, a maximum limit of $180 billion would be placed on the federal deficit for 1986. Each year after, the maximum would be decreased by $36 billion, which would, at least theoretically create a balanced budget in 1991.

Before his presidency, during the president's campaigns, all who would listen were told balanced budgets would be a reality by 1983, courtesy of the Reagan administration. And now the government's workers and beneficiaries are paying the costs for his latest balanced-budget dream, to be fulfilled in five

There is little doubt a balanced federal budget would be desirable, but in light of current inaction, there is little indication, realistically, that it will happen.

The real, most immediate victims are those who will not be able to cash checks issued for wages or Social Security benefits.

It is ridiculous these Dole, R-Kan., said a meeting individuals must pay for the inaction and grandstanding of those elected to serve them.

International students deserve toleration

"It is a magnificent day. The sun is shining warm rays on the green grass..." began one international student.

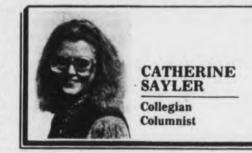

Another student waiting in line smiled, feeling slightly silly at the English fluency test he was about to take.

The sequence of pictures he would be asked to describe were fairly mundane. Ink blots would have been better. At least, then, he might have gained some new insights into his psyche.

Demonstration of English fluency is a new requirement for international students at Kansas universities. The Board of Regents, in response to complaints from students that they could not understand some of their international instructors, instituted the policy last year. Students from countries that are classified as non-English speaking must pass the test before being allowed to teach. The policy does not extend to faculty. This year, 31 students (69 percent) passed the test, eight students (18 percent) passed in the marginal category, which allows them to teach provided they are concurrently enrolled in remedial English coursework. and six (13 percent) failed the test. Undergraduates, who have been frustrated by teaching assistants with thick accents, are at first tempted to take the "See, I told you so" attitude when considering the 13 percent failure rate. Such an attitude, however, displays precisely the "ugly American" image we all too often impress on the rest of the world.

An argument can be made for the case that part of a student's education at K-State is learning to tolerate and understand others. A student should be able to listen beyond mispronunciations and even misusages to assimilate the basic concepts of communication. Poetry, which is often regarded as a highly refined, intense literary form demands much the same skill of its

Of course, though, a graduate student whom almost no one understands explaining a complex technical subject is an ineffective teacher for Kansas students. The regents have recognized this, and have instituted a policy to alleviate the the problem.

As gracious winners, students should be concerned not with how "right" they were about the 13 percent failure but with the consequences of the policy they have imposed on a portion of their fellow students.

What about the 13 percent, we should be asking. What's being done for them? Can they stay at K-State, or must they fly home without an education and without educating us on their special worldly insights? Indeed, we must each ask ourselves what we can do to help those persons.

Currently, K-State has only one speech course for international students - Speech 065, Spoken English for International Students - taught by James Armagost, associate professor of speech. Armagost predicts that the English proficiency of most of his students will improve, simply because they are now living in an English-speaking society. The fluency test will be given again at the beginning of the spring semester, Armagost said. It is hoped that no international students will fail the test.

International students contribute so much to the University atmosphere, both in terms of innovative research and in their diversity of ideas, customs and values. To lose even one international student to such a correctable problem as English fluency would be a terrible loss. It's time to extend a little midwestern hospitality and show an active concern in the fate of our fellow

Similar traits mark retiring senators

It is ironic that Republican control of the Senate after 1986 should be jeopardized by the recently announced retirement decisions of two such seemingly contrasting characters as senators Paul Laxalt of Nevada and Charles Mathias of Maryland. They appear to be opposites in everything but their vote-getting ability, which the GOP will miss mightily next year as it struggles to keep its shaky senate majority.

But Laxalt and Mathias have more traits in common than is obvious. The liberal Easterner and the conservative Westerner were born within nine days of each other in the summer of 1922. They both came out of World War II and entered local politics, and both have established themselves as the most successful and only consistent Republican winners in states with heavy Democratic registration edges.

For all the difference in their political philosophies, they are remarkably similar in personality - which is the reason they are probably irreplaceable as candidates in 1986. There are few senators of either party whose retirement automatically shifts the odds in favor of the opposition taking over the seat. Mathias and Laxalt are definitely in that category.

They are both blessed with a quiet charm and sense of humor which have enabled them to withstand the vanities of the Senate far better than most of its members. They are as their constituents, their colleagues and reporters know - fun to be around.

They are both lawyers whose real love is the land. Mathias is as fond of his farm in western Maryland as Laxalt is rapturous about his ranch. They both know there is more to life than Senate roll-calls, which is why they are leaving without regrets while still in their primes.

DAVID BRODER Syndicated Columnist

They are alike in another respect. Neither likes to work too hard. They always have taken time to smell the flowers. They enjoy good company and conversation, and they are not afflicted with consciences which require that they be demonstrably improving each shining hour.

It is not an accident that Laxalt has served 11 years in the Senate and Mathias 17 without attaining the chairmanship of a major committee. Mathias was denied the chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee by a conservative power play in 1981 and was relegated to the relatively unimportant Rules Committee chairmanship. But the truth of the matter is that neither has the ego or the drive that goads him to seek power.

But there is an obvious difference in their status as they approach retirement - a difference which speaks volumes about them and about their party. Laxalt leaves as general chairman of the Republican Party and closest personal and political friend of the President of the United States. Mathias leaves as a figure beloved to his friends and admired for his work on civil rights and environmental legislation, but as a a man so far from the levers of power in his party that his only recourse has been to align himself on key issues with the opposition Democrats.

How did this happen? It happened in part because the tides of history have moved the center of gravity in the Replublican Party westward and rightward - enhancing the influence of conservatives like Laxalt and President Reagan and diminishing the sway of progressives like Mathias and his natural allies among the eastern seaboard Republicans.

While Mathias hitched his hopes to the ambitions of men such as the late Nelson A. Rockefeller, Laxalt joined forces with Reagan. The rest, as they say, is history. But there is more to it than that, for men shape their destiny as much as destiny shapes them.

The contrast between Mathias and Laxalt parallels the difference between the progressive and conservative wings of the GOP in the past 20 years. It is, in part, a contrast between political effort and political

The difference between professionalism and dilettantism has been increasingly obvious in the status of the two men. In 1976, when Laxalt was managing Reagan's almost successful challenge to President Ford, Mathias was toying with an independent candidacy for President.

In 1984, while Laxalt presided at the conservatives' triumphant renomination of Reagan in Dallas, Mathias, typically, was writing an apologetic piece for The Washington Post, headlined "Why Should a Moderate Go to Dallas?" In it he said that conservatives were in the saddle because people like himself "do not pay close attention to party affairs...It has been a longterm generational weakness of Republican moderates."

As usual, Mathias had it right. And, as usual, Laxalt had it made.

Agronomy instructor lacks professional behavior

Re: Shelly Dicken's article, "Godly instruction focus of crop course," in the Sept. 26 Collegian:

When I first read the article about Associate Professor Stanley Ehler's "Godly views," I laughed. The whole thing is so

But the issues of religious and sexual prejudice that are exemplified in the article are serious matters. Forcing one's religion or moral views on another is obnoxious in any environment. In a public school classroom, it is not only obnoxious, it is against the law.

I was also appalled at Ehler's use of the terms "boy" and "girl." Certainly, when a professor refers to a student who is at least 17 years old and enrolled in a university as a girl or boy, rather than woman or man, he shows that student a great lack of respect.

The women's movement that has swept the world over the past 20 years has allowed us to treat people as individuals without regard to race, religion or sex. Ehler's generalization that most of the women at K-State are here solely to look for a husband is erroneous. His statement that that is what they are supposed to be doing is backward and demeaning.

Thank goodness the movement over the past two decades that has liberated men and women alike has allowed people to choose what is right for them as individuals. This has allowed many women to excel in their fields and make great contributions in all areas, including agriculture.

I know K-State is training professional, capable women. Part of professionalism is to keep our personal life separate from our professional life. I sincerely hope that Ehler is an isolated case and that the rest of the staff and administration maintain a higher level of professionalism than he.

PONCE, Puerto Rico - Hundreds of residents of a devastated shantytown watched anxiously Tuesday as National Guardsmen and U.S. Army engineers dug through tons of wood and mud in search of their relatives and neighbors missing in mudslides and flooding. Sixty-six people are known to have been killed.

Authorities said hundreds of people were missing and thousands were in shelters after the tropical deluge. Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon called it "the worst tragedy ever to hit our island."

National Guardsmen said 18 bodies had been recovered from Mameyes, a half-mile-square, impoverished 10-hour period on the south coast.

The weather here was sunny and clear, and hundreds of people watched the excavation at Mameyes.

Dean of Architecture wins research grant

By The Collegian Staff

Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, has received a grant to do research in three foreign countries during the next two weeks.

Lapping is the recipient of a British Council Research Grant, which will allow him to go to Europe and work with an English scholar on joint programs and projects.

Lapping will be visiting Copenhagen, Denmark; Malmo and Lund in Sweden; and London, Exeter, Manchester and Cadiss in England.

Lapping found out about the grant through a colleague in England, Andrew Gilg of the University of Exeter in Devon. Lapping will leave today and return to Manhattan on Oct. 23. The British Council Research Grant is given to a British scholar and an American scholar who apply jointly to the Council. Lapping applied in cooperation with Gilg, who is one of Britain's foremost geographers.

During the trip, Lapping will give lectures about the nature of social and economic change in the suburban areas of the Midwest and Canada

Storm dumps snow across nine states

By The Associated Press

A storm hurling up to 18 inches of snow across nine states with peak winds of 81 mph closed schools and made highways treacherous Tuesday, but for North Dakota grain farmers it was just another bad day in a miserable month.

"It's the same rainy, wet story that has been told for the last six weeks," said Dan Dhuyvetter, Burke County agent in Bowbells, N.D. "There is a good 50 percent of the grain crop left unharvested.

"We have a lot of standing grain and the weight of the snow is starting to pull it down to the ground. Even if we do get some good weather from now on, I think we'll still be leaving quite a bit of crop in the fields."

Travelers advisories were posted in parts of Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and Minnesota as well as in North Dakota, while roads in northern Utah, where accumulations reached 18 inches, were clearing Tuesday. The storm, which had peak wind gusts of 81 mph Monday at Rawlins, Wyo., also dusted parts of South Dakota, Oregon and Idaho with snow.

In Colorado's mountains, skiers were out early at the Berthoud Pass resort to enjoy the fresh snow.

Record low temperatures were reported in 16 cities from Eugene, Ore., to Montana, with Great Falls, Mont., posting a low of 12 degrees. That knocked 6 degrees off the record for the date set in 1966.

Cut Bank, Mont., was the nation's ice box Tuesday at 8 degrees.

In North Dakota, the harvest of spring wheat and durum wheat, already 25 days behind schedule in some areas, was put off again as the storm dumped up to 14 inches of snow in North Dakota.

"If we had a solid week of good weather we could go out and get it finished," said Robert Carver, director of the North Dakota Crop and Livestock Reporting Service in Fargo.

Snow accumulations ranged up to 14 inches in Sawyer, N.D., a town of 417 just south of Minot. Rain fell in southeastern North Dakota Tuesday morning. Larry Beard, crop statistician for the reporting service, said it was too early to put a damage estimate on crops that remain unharvested.

Conference to focus on classroom instruction

By The Collegian Staff

Improving classroom instruction is the focus of the Kansas Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development conference.

The association is sponsoring the conference on campus Thursday and Friday. Approximately 140 administrators and teachers are expected to attend. The association comprises school administrators, said Gerald Bailey, professor of curriculum and instruction and executive secretary of the organization.

The first-day sessions will be conducted by Jane Stallings, a professor at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn. Stallings is a teacher-educator involved in effective-teacher research. She will be speaking on improving classroom instruction. Sessions on the second day will led by Pam Robbins, a consultant from the Napa County Office of Education, Napa, Calif. Robbins will be working with administrators and teachers on staff development.

The conference has been held at K-State for the last three years because of its geographic location and facilities.

Murdered youngster's father suspect in theft of payments

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - The father of a boy whose murder was planned by his stepmother has been charged with stealing the boy's Social Security benefits for four years.

Edward L. Hobson Jr., of Roeland Park, has been charged with one felony count involving $7,039 in benefits his son, Christen, would have received as the result of his natural mother's death in 1976.

The regional inspector general's office of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services discovered last summer that payments to Christen were continuing under a direct deposit arrangement into a Mission bank account. The monthly benefit checks, which ranged from $153 to $189, were allegedly deposited into the account from September 1980 to August 1984. Christen was killed in April 1980. His natural mother, Shirley J. Hobson, died in March 1976.

Sueanne Hobson is serving a life sentence at the Kansas State Penitentiary on convictions of firstdegree murder and conspiracy.

Her son, James Crumm, was convicted in 1981 of first-degree murder in Christen's death. Paul Sorrentino is serving a life sentence after pleading guilty to being an accomplice.

Latchkey children: a concern of Manhattan

By LEANNE STOWE Staff Writer

With a house key dangling around their neck, they come home from a day at school to an empty house. They watch television or play video games. Some may even do homework.

They are latchkey children, and there are many of them in Kansas and across the na-

Because of problems in leaving a small child at home alone, two new programs aimed specifically at eliminating the problem of self-care for children have surfaced in

One program new to the area is the After-School Care program provided by College Avenue Methodist Church, 1609 College Ave.

Diane Ayers, program director for the ASC program, said ASC was started following an incident in which a child was hurt after school when an older brother was supposed to be looking after her.

"The program came about because people in the church had seen a need for it and because school principals in the area had recognized that students were hanging around after school, or coming back to the school after it had been out for 30 minutes,' Ayers said.

She said children would come back to the school with a scraped knee or torn sock because they felt safe at school.

"The children knew they could get help at school, they felt safe there if a bully was after them or whatever," Ayers said.

Ayers said she thinks in the future the after-school care programs will bloom throughout the city.

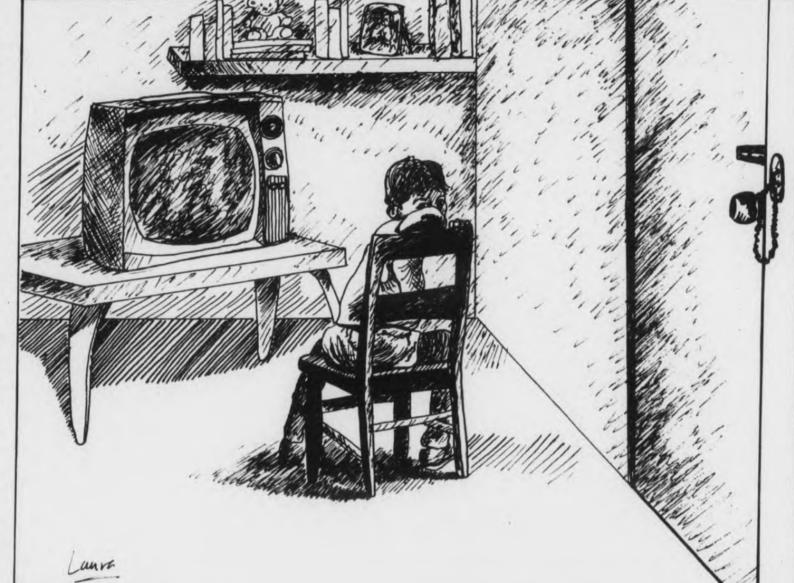

"I'm betting in a few years there will be an after-school program open to anyone and everyone," she said. "Either churches, or school will pick it up.'

At the University For Man, 1221 Thurston St., a similiar program has been set up, called "Be Busy After School."

Tybil Miller, coordinator of "Be Busy," said the program came about after individuals at UFM noticed there was no afterschool care for students at several area schools.

The decision to use the UFM house for the program came after it was realized the house wasn't being used during the after-

Although the programs are new to Manhattan, the issue is not.

Latchkey children have been around since the early 1970s, said Donna Jackson, coalition coordinator for The Kansas Committee on Child Abuse. She said those years marked the beginning of mothers and single-parents leaving the home for employment.

"Single-parents going back to work has had the highest influence in the latchkey situation," Jackson said.

When mothers started going to work and both parents entered into full-time careers, children would come home and take care of themselves until a parent got home, which she said commonly instilled negative feelings in the children.

"The number-one feeling I get from children is that when they are home alone or with a brother or sister they feel boredom and fear," she said.

Jackson said school administrators have voiced their concern about the after-school care of the children, but have taken little ac-

"From school administrators I hear, 'Yes, it is needed, but also very expensive," she said.

Jackson said other organizations, such a churches, have been forming after-school care programs. She also noted some regular day-care programs have extended hours to include after-school care.

Jackson said attempts by employers to establish child-care programs for employees' children have generally been successful.

"Some hospitals have taken on employersupported child-care services. I think the effort to recognize the latchkey child is a national trend. In the long run, Kansas is keeping up with the trend," she said.

Another problem facing parents is the uncertainty of the quality of child care, Jackson said.

"After the incident out in California (when several staffers at a child-care center were indicted for child molestation), parents are more cautious about where their children go for care. They look very closely at the care services and some may even be hesitant to put their child in a child-care program," she

The safety of their children in the hands of others takes on more problems for the childcare programs, Jackson said.

"After the problem out in California, as a large trend, the insurance rates for newly developed child-care programs have gotten extremely high," she said. "The insurance for six months was unbelievable.

The guilt a working parent feels about leaving the child home alone is one reason it is hard to gauge how big a problem the latchkey situation is, Jackson said.

"I think people move in great caution," she said. "There are a number of reasons we have trouble getting information about children who take care of themselves.

"The parents have a high guilt level about leaving the child home alone. Employers who try to get information about their employees' children (taking care of themselves) have a hard time because of the

Because of the expense of child-care programs, and the high number of children who are still left alone, the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. is implementing two programs throughout the state to help alleviate fears children may have while alone.

Marcie Welch, manager of the Manhattan Southwestern Bell office, said she hoped the two programs, "Phone-Friend" and "Phone-Pal" would begin soon in Manhattan, but was unsure when it would happen. She said the programs have been successful in the Kansas City, Leavenworth and Topeka areas.

"Phone-Friend" allows children to call a number and talk to a volunteer, Welch said. With "Phone-Pal," children and volunteer individuals are matched so the child has a specific person to call after school, or at any other time the child wants to talk.

Therapy unit provides senior citizen activities

By COLLEEN WILSON Staff Writer

Recovery from an injury or debilitating illness for older persons can be different from placing a youth's arm in a sling after a playground accident.

Locally, older residents can receive therapy in a setting designed specifically for their age group, with attention to their particular needs.

"Dealing with older people is different than dealing with youths because their progress is slower," said Colleen Gregory, certified physical therapy assistant at Meadowlark Hills Retirement Living community, 2121 Meadowlark Road. "With older people, the most important thing is to make them feel better about themselves," Gregory said. "We try to help each of them to be as independent as possible within their own physical ability.

The Health Care Unit at Meadowlark offers a daily physical therapy program to senior citizens in the the community. The program, which began six years ago, was designed to help the elderly to recover from strokes, arthritis or other afflictions that limit bodily functions.

With older people, the most important thing is to make them feel better about themselves. We try to help each of them to be as independent as possible within their own physical ability.'

> -Colleen Gregory physical therapy assistant

The therapy program is available to fulltime patients of the Health Care Unit, residents in Meadowlark's housing and participants of Day-Care - a program during the day for the elderly who are unable to take care of themselves while a spouse is at work. There are currently 43 Health Care patients and six Day-Care patients in the program.

The primary theraputic exercises are designed to develop better muscle strength and movement of joints, while providing general development for the entire body. Therapy equipment includes parallel bars for patients to practice walking, and wallmounted shoulder-wheel, which is handcranked by the patient. Also available is an exercise bicycle, leg and arm weights ranging from 1 to 5 pounds and a queen-size exercise mat for weight-lifting and stretching ex-

Before therapy begins, Gregory said, the Unit must have a physician's verification the patient is physically capable of performing various exercises.

Another test, performed by the therapy unit itself, is a "range of motion" test. During this test, an assistant moves the patients limbs up, down and in circles. If the patient can help with the movement, he or she has an "active range of motion." If not, a "passive range of motion."

After testing, Gara Burnette, a registered therapy consultant, evaluates each individual's capabilities which allows therapy assistants to establish a daily program and goals for each patient.

"Every goal is important," Burnette said. "One day they may walk six steps and the next day the goal may be 12 steps.

Gregory said one of the most successful therapy cases is stroke victim Amy Parker who came to the Health Care Unit in October 1984, in "nearly in a fetal position."

Although Parker is unable to speak because of paralysis from the stroke, Gregory said, she "winced when she heard the word therapy. She was withdrawn but she's really blossomed."

The first exercise Parker was able to do was to rock in a rocking chair. She is now able to stand with help and although she has no use of the right side of her body. She can wheel herself around in her wheelchair using only her left hand.

Margarie Henton, restorative aide, and Gloria Hill, a restorative aide trainee, also help Gregory work with the therapy patients. Gregory said there's a lot of motivation not only from the active patient but from other patients as well. Only two or three patients do their therapy at a time, but generally six to eight other patients observe while waiting

Gregory said the observing patients are a "big support," cheering each other on and applauding each other's achievements. Patients recognize each other's achievements sometimes it "even becomes competitive" among participants.

said, when asked if the therapy has helped. "I like working on it because they're (the assistants) nice people.'

Although Kelley can't operate his wheelchair by himself, he can walk with the help of a four-legged quad-cane.

"We try to let them (patients) do as much as they can by themselves. Mr. Kelley won't even let me put his shoes on for him," Gregory said with a smile as Kelley put his shoes on. "He's a fighter - he won't give up. It's nice to work with people who are motivated.

"I'm really proud of our program," Gregory said. "I think it's important to keep body movement and I think the patients en-

Ag publications reflect farming economy

By JONIE R. TRUED Collegian Reporter

While the "farm crisis" and its effect on farmers may not be new, the effects of a poor farm economy on other segments of agribusiness may not be so readily apparent, according to regional agricultural newspaper

An example of this is seen in the advertising and editorial content of agricultural publications, such as Grass & Grain - a newspaper published by Ag Press, 1531 Yuma St.

Frank Buchman, editor of the weekly newspaper, said the paper's content has a direct relationship to the state of the agricultural economy.

"As the agricultural economy goes, so does the Grass & Grain," he said.

Buchman explained the paradox of the newspaper's position as a reflection of the agricultural economy while at the same time surviving because of it.

Even while advertising has increased in some areas - such as farm bills and auction notices - the newspaper is produced on a continually tightening budget, Buchman said. Thayne Cozart, publisher of the Parsons agricultural newspaper Farm Talk, also said his publication was doing better than most agricultural publications in the area of advertising revenues.

But Cozart also cited the liquidation of family farms as a primary source of adver-

"Eventually the family farms selling out are all going to be gone," Cozart said. "We'll last at least until the liquidation phase is over."

Cozart said a possible means of survival for the publication would be to shift the marketing strategy by serving the future "megafarms."

We will do a good job of surviving - but we will have tough -Hank Ernst times.' Kansas Farmer editor

Fred Knopp, editor of Drover's Journal, an Overland Park-based publication, said advertising revenue for the national weekly newspaper had slowed but sales were continuing at a high level. Content is another area in which agricultural newspapers have changed their

"We emphasize more than ever searching out information to help farmers minimize their losses and maximize profits," Knopp Knopp also said the newspaper reported events significant to the making of the farm

"We keep them (farmers) in touch with other trade organizations and help keep legislation from affecting them negatively,"

Cozart said similar changes in content are affecting editorial copy in Farm Talk.

"We've always done features on farmers with unique projects," he said. "Now we try to find unique marketing ideas for crops to help farmers make some money.'

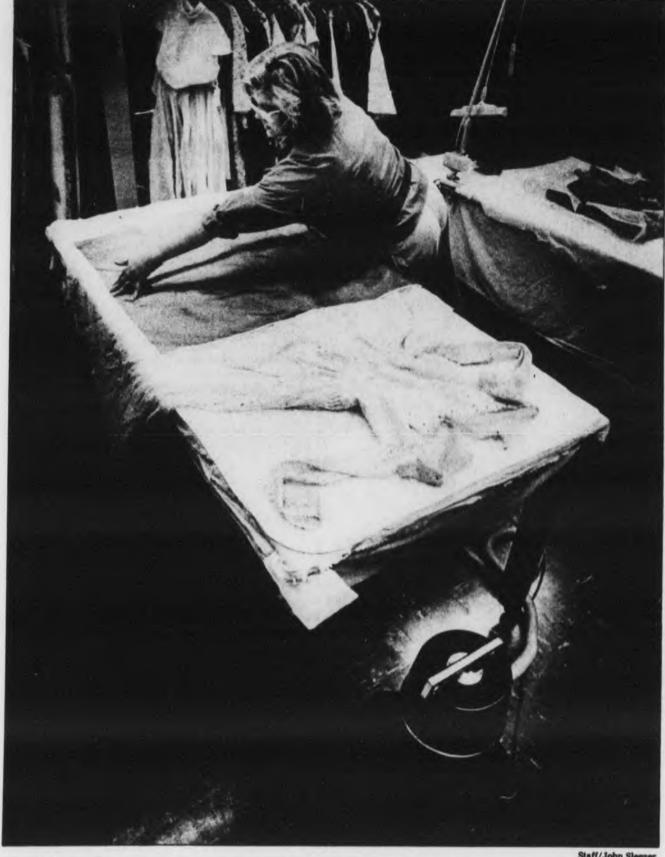

Buchman said Grass & Grain stories are also reflecting the farmer's need for information that will help him survive.

"Farmers depend on information that will help them get better deals on grain and equipment," he said. "We also feature farmers who have developed unique management techniques in crop production, livestock forage use and better use of crops and land.

"We have a lot of stories dealing with farm policies, business management, market information and know-how," Buchman said. "It takes an understanding of all of these aspects to survive in a tight market." Editor Hank Ernst of Kansas Farmer, Topeka, described the focus on marketing survival as "economic information in a brown paper bag." "We will do a good job of surviving - but we will have tough times," Ernst said.

University houses collection of historic costumes, textiles

By MARGARET MAY Collegian Reporter

Inside Justin Hall is a room with a special climate; the temperature is 65 degrees Fahrenheit and the relative humidity is 55 percent. This room houses the Historic Costumes and Textiles Collection owned by the University.

Ann Cordy, assistant professor of Clothing Textiles and Interior Design, is the curator of the collection. Cordy has a doctorate in history of textiles and conservation science.

Cordy said most of the items in the University collection are donated by private individuals. "Anyone wishing to donate an item can contact me, then I check to see if the item fits into the collection for teaching, research or exhibition (purposes)," she said.

A particular garment is sent in or brought in with as much historical information about the item as possible, Cordy said. The information requested includes when or where the garment was purchased or who made it; any alterations the garment may have had; the cost of the item, information about the person who wore the item; when and where the item was worn; and activities related to the garment.

This information is helpful when placing the garment in the correct time period of the collection, she said

There are children's clothes as well as men's and women's clothing in the collection from many different eras, Cordy said. There are wedding dresses and 1920s beaded dresses as well as hats and shoes from each era.

The donor is asked to sign a Deed of Gift which turns the item over to the University as a gift. The gifts are tax deductable, but the donor is responsible for having the garment appraised, she said.

closet to be inspected and cleaned. The garments are always air dried and never ironed.

"You just have to get used to wrinkles," Cordy said.

A special water vacuum is used to vacuum the garment. The vacuum holds the dirt in water so it does not recirculate easily.

While a garment is being cleaned it is checked for bugs or larva. These problems are treated before the item is tagged with a number, date and storage location, Cordy said.

'The collection is in clean storage. It is kept clean and never worn or used again," Cordy said. "We do not loan the clothes out to be worn or used once they are in the collection." If an item is taken out for a display or a class, it is placed in the holding closet again before returning to the collection storage room, she said.

The storage room was renovated in the spring of 1985 and the collection was moved into the room during the first two weeks of August even though the room is not completely finished, Cordy said. The room has no outside walls or windows, which helps maintain the proper temperature and humidity to preserve the textiles. Weather stripping on the doors keeps the bugs out. Tungston halogen lights, which emit a minimum of heat and light, are set on separate switches so they don't need to be turned on at the same time, she said.

'Three kinds of storage can be used to house a collection," Cordy said. In vertical storage areas, garments

The item is taken into a holding are hung on padded hangers in closets lined with paper, so nothing from the stains or wood used in the cabinets rubs off on the clothes. Flat storage is used for clothes that can't be hung, such as beaded dresses. Dresses are laid flat in drawers and wrapped in acid-free tissue paper so the heavy beads do not rip the cloth. Rolled storage is used for large items such as coverlets and blankets, but the University doesn't have the facilities for this type of storage, she

> The collection, which is almost 100 years old, is kept in two rooms. The largest one houses Western European clothes from the 1800s to the present, Cordy said, and non-European clothes and textiles are in a smaller room.

> 'The conservation lab opened in the fall of 1985 and is one of very few in the country," Cordy said. The lab consists of a wet-chemical area where dye analysis - studying the kinds of dyes used - takes place. A large rolling table used to wash garments and lay them out to dry can be found in the wet-cleaning area. The dry area is used for microscopic analysis to study the weave of a material or a certain embroidery stitch. Eventually the lab will be equipped to restore items, a factor kept in mind when accecpting donations, Cordy said.

Certified windsurfing instructor Dave Bender, senior in electrical engineering, is silhouetted against the late afternoon sky, while surfing in the Stockdale area of Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Wind and Water

If the temperature is above 50 degrees and the wind is blowing with sufficient force, chances are you'll find several Manhattan residents out on the waters of Tuttle Creek Reservoir participating in their favorite sport - windsurfing.

Windsurfing originated in 1969 as James R. Drake and Hoyle Schweitzer successfully "married" the sports of surfing and sailing to form a new sport that would catch on like wildfire in the coastal areas of the United

But as quickly as the sport caught on in the coastal areas of the couintry, it caught on even more quickly in Europe, according to Manhattan resident Bernard Buster, a windsurfing instructor and owner of Blue River Water Sports.

"With the European mentality, logistics and so-forth, chances were the sport would be something that they could get into and they very promptly did," Buster said.

Buster said it is not uncommon to find up to 10,000 boards on the water on a weekend in Northern Italy. That compares with the 10 to 15 boards one would find on an average weekend in Manhattan, he said.

"When we reach the point that we can see 100 boards out on this (Tuttle Creek) lake we will have reached a milestone as far as the sport in Kansas is concerned," Buster said.

It was that goal and the desire to help others learn about the sport that motivated Buster and his wife, Brenda, to open Blue River Water Sports. Both agree the thrills involved with the sport are reason enough to get involved. "I've been snow skiing all my life, and windsurfing is the only sport that I've encountered that gives me the same sensations and thrills that snow skiing does," Bernard Buster said.

Brenda Buster said several misconceptions about the sport are preventing it from "taking off" in Kansas and other areas around the nation, and this is evident when the Busters are trying to get people to enroll in their windsurfing class.

"When we were trying to get people to register, we heard comments from people who said 'we tried it but it's too hard,' Brenda said. "I can understand the difficulty one would encounter if self-taught, because the necessary body skills that need developed for the sport are tough."

But not too tough to keep from learning through proper training, Bernard Buster said.

"Usually the worst way to learn is by teaching yourself," he said. "One should proceed in logical segments and chunks. A great deal of skill and finesse are required to participate in the sport, and thinking your way through what you're doing is important."

Buster said it would cost a novice between $600 and $700 to get started in the sport - to purchase the board and other gear. He said that some enthusiasts are now paying in excess of $1,500 for top-of-the-line boards made of foam coated with fiberglass.

One, however, can't just go out and buy a board and immediately expect to be an expert, Brenda Buster said. It takes practice, practice, practice.

"That is why we make extensive use of the 'land simulator' in our instructional courses," she said. "We've found that the more time you spend on the land simulator, the more you experience the sensations. This way, the things students encounter on the water are not such a surprise to them."

But in order to get people enthused about the sport, windsurfing enthusiasts like the Busters have had to overcome several misconceptions about windsurfing, including the notions that the sport is too difficult and too dangerous for the common person to

"Windsurfing is not an easy sport, but it is not, as many people mistakenly believe, a strength sport," Bernard Buster said. "The one thing that makes a quick learner is intelligence - the ones that are sharp, that listen and that translate their ideas into practice are the ones that are most successful in the sport."

Brenda Buster said the dangers of the sport have also been blown out of proportion.

"The sport is dangerous if you are sailing in the surf, but we see very little opportunity for danger here," she said. "There are no sharks, no coral reefs, no Portugese Men-of-War to avoid."

Bernard agreed.

"There might be a time when one is placed in an inconvenient situation, but very rarely a life-threatening one," he said. The Busters would love nothing better than to help area residents overcome their fears and get up on the water. The experience is one they feel is unmatched anywhere.

"We have a great deal of difficulty of keeping ourselves off the water and tending to business," Bernard Buster said. "As soon as the wind starts to blow, your mind instantly drifts off to the lake where you could be out on the water.

"The feeling I get when I'm out on the water is exhilirating."

While Dave Bender adjusts the tension in the sail, Brenda Buster, co-instructor, smooths out the creases.

Freshman Call makes instant impact for 'Cats

By CLAUDIA SANGSTER Collegian Reporter

Consistent. That is one word of many that K-State volleyball Coach Scott Nelson uses to describe the 'Cats' freshman outside hitter, Shawnee Call.

Call, who came into the K-State program after being a successful multi-sport athlete at Ellsworth High School, had an immediate impact on the Wildcat team be earning a starting position along with five upper classmen.

"I had a goal that I wanted to come right in and play, but everyone has that kind of goal," she said. "Everyone gets to play and everyone is equal. We are real Nelson has been impressed with Call.

"Shawnee is an outstanding physical athlete," he said. "She is very strong and for a freshman to come in and play and be consistent, is quite unusual.'

That word consistency always seems to pop up when Nelson talks about Call. Perhaps it is for a good Going into the Big Eight Conference season Friday and Saturday, Call was the third leading attacker for the Wildcats. Her statistics through 42 games included an attacking percentage of 27 percent, 78 assists, 11 service aces, six solo blocks and 23 block assists.

Call's position on the court is known as a technic position. It is one of great responsibility, especially for a freshman player.

'Not only is she an outside hitter for us but she also has setting responsibilities.

"If Renee (Whitney, K-State's setter) has to take the first hit, then Shawnee will take the job of setting up our attacker. She is understanding the technic position and she is understanding it at a good level," Nelson said.

Call attributes her consistency to the efforts of Whitney, a senior co-

Call reached her preseason goal of coming in and playing right away. She has set a number of other goals as well. Not individual goals, but goals for the team. Call said she believes volleyball isn't an individual sport and that everyone must work together to do their part to be successful.

"I want us to make it to nationals," Call said. "I want us to be successful. I want to have our team play to the best of our ability and show what we can do."

While at Ellsworth — a 4A division school - Call participated in volleyball, basketball and track, but during her junior and senior years, devoted herself to volleyball and basketball.

as a junior. Her decision to come to K-State was an easy one to make.

"I wasn't really looking anywhere else but K-State," Call said. "I like the school here and everyone is so nice and friendly." To prepare for the fall volleyball season, Call participated on a United States Volleyball Association Mid-America Junior National team that took her to Canada during the summer.

"I started off playing on an area team," Call said. "I played with Mary Mignano (fellow K-State team member) on a team from Manhattan. The team went to a tournament in Wichita and at the tournament top players were picked to play on the team that toured Canada. Mary and I made it along with (K-State player) Val

Rain stops tennis match against Baker

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's men's tennis team was leading Baker University by a score of three matches to one when rain halted play in Tuesday's dual match at the L.P. Washburn Outdoor Recreation Area tennis courts.

Deon Botha of K-State defeated Mickey Behar of Baker by a score of 3-6, 6-4, 6-0 in No. 1 singles play. K-State's Scott Chandler rolled over Baker's Tracy Buke 6-2, 6-0 in No. 2 singles. Kris James of the Wildcats downed Baker's Gil Sahar 6-3, 6-4 in No. 3 singles.

K-State Coach Steve Bietau said that Botha had difficulty with Behar's game in the early stages of that match.

"Deon couldn't figure out how to attack his opponent and lost a set before he finally did," Bietau said. No. 6 player Darren Polite was the only loser for K-State, dropping his match to Steve Lake of Baker 6-2, 7-5.

K-State's No. 4 and 5 players, Scott Sandlin and Shawn Walburn were not able to complete their matches. When play was discontinued, Sandlin was ahead of Baker's Stan McDonald 7-6, 5-4. Walburn dropped his first set to Bill O'Connor of Baker 7-5, but was ahead of O'Connor by a score of 5-3 in the second.

No doubles play was started in the dual.

While Bietau was pleased with the three wins in the four completed singles matches, he said that the team had not played "really all that Bietau said that Baker had lost their top two players from last year's team, which defeated K-State 9-0 in the spring season, but was as strong as last year in the lower positions.

Bietau said he has used the fall season for the younger players to gain experience for the spring Big Eight season.

"We have freshmen at No. 5 and 6 (Walburn and Polite) and they're a little bit shaky right now, but they're coming along," he said. "We're trying to do some new things with their games and fall is the time to try new things. The guys are playing better all the time.

Stieb shuts down KC bats in 6-1 win

By The Associated Press

TORONTO - Dave Stieb held Kansas City to three hits through eight innings and the Toronto Blue Jays, showcasing the blend that brought them their first-ever division title. beat the Royals 6-1 Tuesday night in the first game of the American League playoffs.

The Blue Jays, the AL East champions in just their ninth season, scored all their runs in the first four innings and finished with 11 hits in the first AL postseason game outside the United States.

The loss in the opener of the bestof-seven series saddled Kansas City Manager Dick Howser with an 0-10 record in the postseason as his Royals crumbled under the Blue Jays' early mix of speed, power and agressiveness

Stieb shut out the Royals through eight innings. Tom Henke, the Jays' surprise bullpen star this season, and Willie Wilson scored the lone fact, came while he was warming to ting pitchers who led the league in earned run average. But while the top-ranked Stieb, with a 2.48 ERA, looked every bit the part, the Blue Jays ripped Charlie Leibrandt and sent him to his earliest exit of the Stieb, whose lack of run support during the season produced a misleading 14-13 record, gave up a two-out double to George Brett in the first inning and a one-out single by Brett in fourth. A pinch-hit double by Dane Iorg in the eighth ended a streak of 12 straight batters retired

Stieb allowed only one other runner, a walk to Pat Sheridan in the fourth, and struck out eight. The hard-throwing Stieb fanned eight different Royals, all except Sheridan, before Henke came in to pitch the Leibrandt, meanwhile, lasted just two full innings and was driven from the mound in third with the bases loaded and no outs. The Blue Jays, who were 0-2 against Leibrandt during the season, ripped the 17-game winner for five runs on seven hits.

Game 2 is scheduled for 2 p.m. this afternoon, when Kansas City lefty Bud Black, 10-15 during the regular season, will face Jimmy Key, 14-6.

A lot of the pregame attention was devoted to Howser's plan to pitch left-handers against Toronto, and the weather. Neither got in the Blue Jays' way.

Game time temperature was 63 degrees - balmy for this city - and the winds that usually whip off Lake Ontario at Exhibition Stadium were mild. There was a little bit of rain during the player introductions, and a very light sprinkle in the third inning that forced baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth to put on his rain coat.

Also among the crowd of 39,115 - a few thousand shy of a sellout - was Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

The Blue Jays, who won 99 games this season, were just 24-26 against left-handers, and Howser hoped to take advantage of that.

But Leibrandt was not effective, and that left the task facing the AL West champion Royals to Black. Danny Jackson, who pitched the eighth for Kansas City, was scheduled to start Game 4 on Saturday back at Royals Stadium.

This was Kansas City's sixth postseason appearance, compared with the first for the Blue Jays. But the Royals were the ones who came unglued when pressured by the Blue

Early start bothers Herzog in tonight's playoff opener

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - When the twilight descends tonight, the St. Louis Cardinals and Los Angeles Dodgers will be playing baseball, and that makes Whitey Herzog unhappy.

"It seems a shame to me that you have to come out to play at 5:30," Herzog said Tuesday at Dodger Stadium, as the Cardinals prepared for the first game of the National League Championship

"I know why it's that way, because of TV," he said of the 5:30 p.m. PDT start. "But this is not a good ballpark to play in at that

"You work your tail off to get here, then you have to play at that time. I don't think it's fair," the St. Louis manager said.

Dodgers Manager Tommy Lasorda, scoffed at Herzog's complaint that hitters are at a disadvantage in the twilight, remarking, "I'd feel bad if they were playing at 8 and we were playing

"I've seen games here at 5 when pitchers got wracked up pretty good," Lasorda said.

Chairman promises fair probe

Commission studying MOVE incident

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA - A special commission Tuesday opened what it termed a "thorough, independent and impartial" probe into the MOVE siege and fire that killed 11 members of the cult and destroyed the surrounding neighborhood.

"We are charged with the responsibility of gathering all the facts, searching them out wherever they may be, without regard to the personal interests of those on whom responsibility may be placed," chairman William Brown III said.

"This panel which sits before you is directed to conduct a thorough, independent and impartial examination of the events leading up to and culminating in the death and destruction on the 13th of May.

The televised proceedings began as scheduled at the studios of WHYY-TV after the Fraternal Order of Police failed in its latest legal challenge against the Philadelphia Special Investigation Commission.

Mayor W. Wilson Goode, who will testify before the panel, appointed the 11-member commission to probe the city's attempt to serve warrants on four members of the back-tonature group and to evict it from its fortified west Philadelphia rowhouse.

Seven adults and four children died in the fortified MOVE house in a fire bomb on it. The fire was allowed to burn out of control for more than an hour, destroying 61 rowhouses, leaving 250 people homeless and causing more than $10 million in damage.

Reading from a 15-page statament, Brown, a former chairman of the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, said the commission hopes "to begin healing the wounds caused by the failure to resolve conflicting lifestyles in a peaceful way."

MOVE has fought authority since 1973, when it demonstrated at the Philadelphia Zoo on grounds that caging animals violated their rights and freedom.

Homes where the group has lived that began after police dropped a in the city were littered with animal excrement and garbage, and dogs and cats were allowed to roam. MOVE members displayed guns and used bullhorns to harass neighbors with rhetoric.

In the last seven years, the city's attempts to act against MOVE ended in two shootouts between police and the group.

The first witnesses before the commission included policemen and former Commissioner Joseph O'Neill, who discussed the events leading up to the first confrontation, in 1978. One policeman died in the shootout and nine MOVE members were convicted of third-degree murder.

Peres said: "We did not get any demands. We do not have to answer."

He did not say what the answer to will not negotiate with terrorists."

Israeli officials said Italian officials believed the pirates boarded at Genoa, origination point of the cruise. But Spanish radio monitors said they heard radio traffic that indicated the hijackers joined the ship at various ports.

Soviet-born defector becomes American

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Soviet-born Walter Polovchak, who at age 12 refused to return to his homeland, severed all legal ties with Moscow Tuesday as he took the oath of U.S. citizenship at a Capitol Hill ceremony.

"I know a lot of people take their freedom for granted," Polovchak, now 18, told an audience of about 200 well-wishers.

"I don't and I never will," he continued. "God bless America." His swearing-in culminated an unusual 51/2-year-long battle to stay in the United States despite his parents' decision to return to the Ukraine in 1980 after a brief hope someday we can be together stay in Chicago. At the ceremony, Polovchak directed this message to his parents: "I wish you well and again. But it will have to be in the West because as long as I live, I'll never set foot in the Soviet Union.'

The ceremony and birthday reception for Polovchak, who turned 18 last week, were sponsored by Liberty Institute, a politically conservative group, and several other organizations, including the Freedom Federation, a coalition of ethnic groups whose members have fled communist-dominated countries. Julian Kulas, Polovchak's attorney, said that while Polovchak still resides in Chicago, he decided to hold the oath-taking in Washington for several reasons.

"We thought it would be very appropriate to do it here...this being the nation's capital and Washington having been very helpful to us in these 51/2 years of Walter's struggle," Kulas said.

Iowa State University drops President Acker from list of candidates

By RICH HARRIS Collegian Reporter

President Duane Acker has been eliminated from the list of candidates for the presidency of Iowa State University in Ames.

Acker was included in the list of 25 finalists released by the Iowa State Board of Regents meeting in September. A search committee composed of students, faculty, alumni and administrators trimmed the list to six names. The Iowa regents will review the recommendations of the committee and select the university's next president.

The names of the six finalists were released Tuesday by ISU. The finalists include John Campbell, dean of agriculture at the University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.; George Christiansen, vice president for academic affairs at ISU; Gordon Eaton, provost and vice president for academic affairs at Texas A&M, College Station, Texas; Charles Knapp, executive vice president for operations at Tulane University, New Orleans; Wilbur Meier Jr., dean of engineering at Pennsylvania State University, University Park, Penn.; and Richard Sauer, vice president for agriculture, home economics and forestry at the University of Minnesota, Minn.

According to the Des Moines Register, 10 candidates were interviewed in Ames last week before the search committee released the names of the six finalists. University officials would not reveal information about the identities of the 10 individuals.

The chairman of the ISU Search Committee, Virgil Lagomarcino, dean of the college of education, refused comment on any matters concerning the selection.

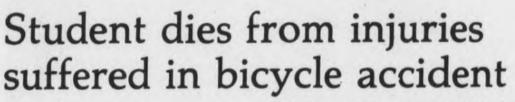

Cy Wainscott, University Relations news editor, said Acker has declined comment on the ISU vacancy since he announced his resignation as K-State president June 27.

Acker received his bachelor's and master's degrees at ISU.

The ISU presidency becomes available when the current president, W. Robert Parks, reaches Iowa's mandatory retirement age of 70 at the end of this school

Acker has held positions at ISU, University of Nebraska, South Dakota State University and Oklahoma State University before assuming the University presidency.

Acker, in his 11th year as president, will officially resign June 30, 1986.

Newton, 24, was thrown from the bike after he veered off the sidewalk at high si the grass and hit a landscaped hill about 5 feet high, said Tom Rokey, senior in feed science, who witnessed the accident from his balcony at Jardine. Rokey said when Newton did not get up he went to the scene of the accident and found Newton lying face down gasping. He said he tried to arouse Newton by shouting at him, but could not get a response. Rokey said he then called the Riley County Ambulance Service. The ambulance took Newton to The St. Mary Hospital. Newton was transferred about an hour later to Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka.

Newton received his bachelor of science degree in physics in December 1984 and entered graduate school in August 1985. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Newton, 2520 W. 43rd St., Kansas City, Kan.

Newton was one of three Manhattan licensed racers with the United States Cycling Federation and was extremely active in cycling activities, said Jerome Nadel, graduate in psychology, and a cycling friend of Newton's.

Nadel said Newton, who was not wearing a helmet at the time of the accident, was an experienced cycler in both road racing and

Attorney files appeals in nine cases

Departments owe $126,784 in state tax

By VICKI REYNOLDS Government Editor

The Kansas Department of Revenue has ordered 29 departments on campus to pay a total of $126,784 in sales and compensating-use taxes following a University audit last the decision. Richard Seaton, University attorney, said many of the appeals were made on the basis that the purchases were state purchases and therefore tax-exempt.

Nine departments are appealing

"Each case is a little different," Seaton said. "In a lot of cases we claimed the department was buying something for state use, and if a state time of purchase. agency is buying it, then it's taxexempt."

Seaton said there were two kinds of taxes for which departments were being held responsible. One is the retail sales tax and the other is the compensating-use tax. A retail sales tax is a tax on commodities or goods and services an organization provides. A compensating-use tax is a tax on the use of a good or service which is bought out-of-state.

The theory behind the compensating-use tax is that it is paid in lieu of a Kansas sales tax when the good is purchased out-ofstate and escapes a sales tax at the Seaton said the housing department is claiming that purchases made for routine maintainence and repairs are tax-exempt because the sales tax has an exemption for state purchases with a special exception for dormitory and housing maintainence and repairs purchases.

The Horticulture Department is claiming its sales of fruits and vegetables in a farmers' market were wholesale transactions, not retail sales, Seaton said.

Seaton said an auditor last winter "picked out a lot of out-of-state purchases" and said they were subject to the compensating-use tax and should have been remitted to the con-

He said some of these were protested while some departments elected to pay the tax.

Some of the major items departments paid taxes on were sales on photocopies made to students, such as those in Farrell Library and copy services, Seaton said.

"When we sell copy services, lab equipment or makeup kits (such as those in the Speech Department) to students," he said, "these are taxable sales. There were no grounds for appeals in these cases.

The payment of those sales taxes from the different departments could

Senate votes to force stabilizing of budget

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Senate voted 75-24 on Wednesday to force the government to balance its annual budget in six years, but the vote failed to end an impasse over legislation to extend the government's exhausted borrowing power.

The balanced-budget amendment, which drew strong bipartisan support, came as the Senate worked on a measure to extend the current debt ceiling to above $2 trillion.

However, the Senate did not finish its work on the overall bill and efforts to approve a shortterm extension of the debt limit collapsed late Wednesday.

The Treasury Department held an emergency auction, anyway, at which it borrowed an additional $5 billion, a sum officials said would keep the government afloat for another week.

Foundation begins foreclosure against MCC

By TRISH MEHAFFEY Staff Writer

In an effort to collect more than $150,000 in delinquent payments, the Christian Church Extension Foundation in Denver is beginning foreclosure procedures against the Manhattan Christian College. Foreclosure papers were filed Friday in 1981, to assist the college with a debtconsolidation and debt-reduction program.

A debt-consolidation program allows a debtor to place separate, individual loans into a single loan, which may allow a lower interest rate to be paid on the single loan.

CCEF is a non-profit corporation which makes loans, secured by real estate holdings, to churches and church-related Pace said MCC property is being used to secure loans of approximately $650,000 to Columbia Savings and approximately $1.14 million and other debts to CCEF.

"Various elements of the college's plan were either delayed or never materialized," said CCEF President David Pace. "Yet the CCEF, with its sympathetic business purpose, continued carrying the loan to provide MCC's administration time to cultivate additional sources of revenue."

Pace said MCC missed the loan payment deadline for the first time in May 1984. The school hasn't met a payment deadline since then. The last loan payment CCEF received from MCC was Jan. 18.

Barry Walker, MCC director of finances, and David Smale, MCC director of public relations, declined to comment further on the foreclosure action.

Pace said the decision to begin foreclosure wasn't an easy one.

The foundation wrote and personally contacted Kenneth Cable, MCC president, and the college's board of trustees, advising them of the foreclosure possibility if monthly payments weren't met, Pace said.

An instigator of the CCEF action was a letter from Columbia Savings of Manhattan, 630 Humboldt St.

"On Aug. 1, 1985, Columbia Savings, a colender to the college, presented letters to the college demanding payment of all amounts in default to Columbia by Sept. 1," Pace said. Due to both financial institutions holding claims on MCC property as loan collateral, CCEF was also required to present a letter, sent Aug. 16, to the college demanding payment. his letter demanded all past payments be paid or CCEF would have to make the date for final payments on the loan earlier than originally scheduled.

Pace said the CCEF's 10-member board of directors considered several factors in the decision to foreclose

Factors Pace cited include MCC's delinquent debt of more than $151,000; MCC's historical practice of paying amounts owed to Columbia Savings but not to CCEF; and MCC's failure to accept a 30-day extension offer from the organization which was automatically requested by not making at least two of the 10 delinquent payments.

Pace said MCC paid its delinquent debt to Columbia after receiving the Aug. 1 letter, but CCEF still did not receive payment.

This past weekend Walker said the school's response would depend largely on approval of a development project which would allow the sale of 68,000 square feet of land on the MCC campus for $680,000. Proceeds from the land sale are to be applied toward repaying The Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board approved the sale at their meeting Monday night. The planning board will present the plan to the Manhattan City Commission for final approval on Oct. 24. Pace said CCEF was sympathetic to churches and related organizations and wanted MCC to resolve its financial problems and find a new plan for stability, but MCC has to operate in a business-like

"The CCEF's fiduciary responsibility to its church member investors from 23 states across the nation dictates that we proceed with foreclosure at this time," Pace said.

Publication reports on Israeli raid

LONDON - Eight Israeli F-16 bombers and a number of F-15 fighters carried out last week's raid on the Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters in Tunisia, Jane's Defense Weekly reports.

This week's edition of the magazine quotes unidentified defense sources as saying the planes took off from bases in Israel and were refueled in flight twice en route to Tunis, 1,500 miles away. One more refueling from Boeing 707 tankers was made on the warplanes' return flight, the magazine said.

The Israeli military command said the planes refuled in flight, but gave no information on the number or type of aircraft that conducted

A total of 36 aircraft are thought to have been involved in the operation, Jane's said. It said the American-manufactured F-16As hit the target with 1,100 pound bombs and laser-guided weapons while the F-15As flew air defense cover.

The raid was reported to have killed 73 people and demolished buildings at the headquarters outside Tunis.

Israel said the raid was mounted in retaliation for the Sept. 25 slaying of three Israelis at a Cyprus marina and was directed at the headquarters of a PLO cell which allegedly ordered the Cyprus attack.

"The point of maximum danger for the strike aircraft was on the outbound leg south of Malta, which brought them closest to the Libyan and Tunisian coasts, although surveillance radar coverage is reported to be weak in this area," the magazine said.

Jane's quoted the Tunisian Embassy in London as charging that "all the major powers" detected the aircraft as they flew toward Tunis but did nothing to warn Tunisia. Jane's said the British Royal Air Force's top-secret listening post on Mount Troodos in Cyprus "probably detected the aircraft."

Governor attends victims' funeral

PONCE, Puerto Rico - Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon joined hundreds of mourners in the city coliseum Wednesday for a mass funeral of many of the 68 known victims of this week's floods and mudslides. An official said as many as 500 more are feared dead.

Sobbing and wailing relatives and friends filed past the caskets of 23 of the 25 bodies pulled from the mud and debris of the nearby Mameyes shantytown, where a Monday morning landslide triggered by a tropical deluge destroyed 400 homes.

Hernandez Colon said, "This is the worst tragedy ever to hit our island in its history. It fills me with pain, as governor and as a Ponce native."

Rescue teams working around the clock reported finding three more bodies under the Mameyes mud Tuesday night, bringing the unofficial count there to 28.

Ponce's deputy mayor, Angel Emeterio Atienza, estimated as many as 500 bodies are still buried in Mameyes.

Crist comments on movies' success

OXFORD, Ohio - The popularity of bloody warrior movies like "Rambo: First Blood Part II" suggests there's something wrong in America, movie critic Judith Crist says.

Crist, at Miami University for a news conference and speech Tuesday night, called "Rambo" brainless and despicable and said she is not sure why such movies are enjoying a wave of popularity.

"Perhaps there is a frustration in the series of hostage situations we've had, the economic conditions which may not be as good had thought," she said. "There may be something quite wrong at the heart of the country, something lacking. A need for fairy tales: 'We'll go out and we'll bash and we'll smash.' I don't know. I'll leave it to the shrinks.'

She added, "Sometimes I think there's a vicarious sadism being exorcised."

Crist, a movie reviewer for TV Guide since 1965, said "Rambo" isn't complimentary to the U.S. soldiers who fought in Vietnam. The movie involves a rescue attempt of soldiers supposedly left there.

Former leader sees momentum loss

NEW HAVEN, Conn. - The first president of the National Organization for Women says the women's movement is almost paralyzed because it is "out of sync with the problems of the younger generation.' Betty Friedan told about 100 women at Yale University Tuesday night that the women's movement has lost its momentum in the same way it did after women won the right to vote in 1920.

Friedan said there is a lack of concern over the "gutting" of laws guaranteeing women affirmative action, equal rights and the right to have an abortion.

Young women "no longer see themselves as part of the political battle" and perceive problems like the lack of day care to be personal ones, she said.

Friedan was a founder of NOW in addition to being its first president. She is the author of the 1963 book, "The Feminine Mystique," which served as a catalyst for the modern feminist movement.

Regulators refuse to earmark fuel

WASHINGTON -- Government energy regulators declined on Wednesday to earmark cheap, price-controlled natural gas primarily for residential and small business consumers at potential savings to them of $5 billion a year.

But in adopting three other measures markedly changing the way the government has dealt with natural gas for the past five decades, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) opened up access to lower-priced supplies now available from producers but going

Most analysts agreed that the competition-spurring actions will help send consumer rates down.

The $50-billion-a-year natural gas industry, including producers, pipeline companies and local distributors, now provides slightly more than one-fourth of the nation's energy.

The new regulations, to begin taking effect Nov. 1, would end the traditional monopoly that pipeline companies have had in buying gas from producers and reselling it to industry and local utilities who distribute it to residential and commercial users.

Officials waiting for tropical storm

MIAMI - Tropical Storm Isabel, with winds near 65 mph, headed toward Florida on Wednesday, and disaster officials along the nation's southeast coast cast a wary eye, much as they did two weeks ago for Hurricane Gloria.

The storm, whose maximum sustained winds were near 65 mph, was moving west at 15 mph on a course that would center it near the northeast Florida coast Thursday morning.

At 6 p.m., Isabel's center war near latitude 28.4 north, longitude 77.3 west, or about 225 miles east-southeast of Daytona Beach, Fla., moving 100 miles since noon, the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables said.

Forecasters said they did not expect Isabel to grow into a hurricane.

"We don't want to rule out the possibility, even though it doesn't look likely," said center meterologist Mark Zimmer. "But it is going to be moving across the warm waters of the Gulf Stream, and that could strengthen it a bit."

The 6 p.m. advisory said that northeasterly winds between the storm and a large, high-pressure system over the Eastern United States will cause tides 2 to 3 feet above normal, minor coastal flooding and beach erosion along the Georgia and northeast Florida coasts Wednesday night.

Winds were gusting to near 30 mph along the Florida coast by midday.

Mother, daughter enter guilty plea

TOPEKA - A mother and her daughter pleaded guilty in Shawnee County District Court Tuesday to swindling two Topekans out of about $93,000 in what officials call a "gypsy bujo scam."

Laura Williams, 33, and Sylvia Williams, 21, entered their guilty pleas before Judge Franklin R. Theis, who set sentencing for 11:30 a.m. Nov. 5 before Judge James Macnish.

The women, who previously were convicted on similar charges in Duluth, Minn., operated "Mrs. Lang's Fortune Telling and Palm Reading" studio here. In Duluth, Laura Williams was known as "Mrs. Lamont."

In one of the two cases involving the pleas, Sylvia Williams was accused of saying the victim of the scam was possessed and that her mother, who claims to be psychic, could exorcise the demon spirit. In the other case, the two women reversed their roles, the state alleged.

Under terms of a plea agreement, the two women may be required to pay nearly $190,000 in restitution to nine victims of the scam in Topeka. The payback of the money is contingent on Judge Macnish's agreeing to place them on probation.

Judge says Fort Riley soldier guilty

JUNCTION CITY - A soldier from Fort Riley pleaded no contest Wednesday to a charge of conspiracy to commit murder in the death of another soldier who was shot with a crossbow and beaten with a shovel

Pfc. Timothy S. Keenan, 19, of Windham, Maine, was found guilty by Geary County Associate District Judge Melvin Gradert, who scheduled sentencing for Nov. 19.

Keenan and Pvt. 1 Wayne R. Partridge Jr., 19, of Waterford, Conn., were charged in the March 21 death of Pvt. 2 Francis Badame, 18, of Buffalo, N.Y. All three were members of the same company at Fort Riley.

Badame was slain in March and his body was found April 22 in a shallow grave at the edge of the military reservation.

Partridge was sentenced Oct. 2 to between five and 20 years in prison on his conviction for conspiracy to commit murder. That sentences is concurrent with a life sentence he received after pleading guilty to first-degree murder during a military courtmartial on Sept. 5.

Keenan faces an Army court martial Oct. 22 at Fort Riley on the two military charges, which could carry the death penalty.

Actors begin season with O'Neill drama

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State Players will open their 11th season at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium with Eugene O'Neill's play, "A Moon for the Misbegotten.

The drama is about an alcoholic, played by Craig Stout, junior in theater, who finds comfort one night in the arms of a farmer's daughter, played by Marcia Sullivan, senior in journalism and mass communications. The play is a mix of tragedy and comedy as well as an autobiographical piece about O'Neill and his family.

O'Neill is recognized as one of the best playwrights of serious American drama. He won four Pulitzer Prize awards for his efforts and "A Moon for the Misbegotten" was his final work. Although the original 1947

Board's motion to endorse lottery fails

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The State Board of Education refused to endorse a statewide lottery Wednesday as it approved a list of proposals that board members want to promote during the 1986 session of the Kansas Legislature.

A motion to endorse a lottery failed on a 6-4 vote even after board member Dale Carey, of Princeton, sought to have the board's resolution call for directing all revenues from a lottery to Kansas' public schools.

"I think we're seeing more and more support for a lottery," Carey said. "And I think we should get the message out that it should directly benefit education."

The action came one day after Attorney General Robert T. Stephan endorsed passage of a lottery measure that would raise $40 million for the state. A resolution that would allow voters to decide in November 1986 whether to implement a lottery was approved in the Senate during the 1985 session. It now awaits action tax could generate revenue far in the House when the Legislature convenes in January.

Few lottery opponents on the state board argued against it during discussion of the matter. However, board member Kathleen White, of Johnson County, said she believes education programs in the state would get a bigger boost from an increase in the sales tax.

Mrs. White added that it might be two years before the lottery would provide any revenue while a sales earlier.

Connie Hubbell, a board member from Topeka, said she thought that linking all lottery revenues to education would be asking too much. "I think we're expecting a great deal if we expect all that money to go to education," she said.

However, board member Marion "Mick" Stevens, of Wichita, said he believes schools in states that currently have lotteries are financially better off than Kansas schools.

Kassebaum was one of four Republicans to vote against the measure which the Senate approved 75-24. Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas supported it.

The proposal, which was attached as an amendment to a bill raising the government's debt ceiling, would establish annual targets for eliminating the more than $200 billion deficit in six years and require the president to impose spending cuts in government programs to comply if Congress is unable to meet the goals. However, Kassebaum objected that too little of the federal budget was subject to the proposal. By her estimate, nearly 80 percent of the budget - $746 billion of this year spending of $975 billion - would be off-limits.

Social Security, defense money for contracts signed in previous year, and interest on the debt would be among the largest items excluded from the deficit reduction proposal, which was developed by Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas; Warren Rudman, R-N.H.; and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.

"All of these exemptions raise a very serious question about the fairness of the plan," said Kassebaum.

In addition, she noted that President Reagan had vowed in his weekly radio speech to continue with military spending increases in spite

"I had hoped we we're going to ad- of the proposal, which the administration backs.

"He will not support the substantial cutback that this plan supposedly requires," Kassebaum said.

With much of the budget excluded from the deficit-reduction package, it means cost-of-living increases will be wiped out for most social programs "for veterans, the elderly, the poor, disabled and blind," she said.

'The plan also could require a prolonged freeze on Medicare payments with potentially severe results on the quality of health care for the elderly," said Kassebaum.

"I have long been in favor of making the tough decisions necessary to genuinely address our huge deficit. But I am convinced, to be successful, any plan to cut spending must be done across the board."

World court needs respect

"Since there's not an example to follow, we won't set one," is President Ronald Reagan's latest stab at the viability of the United Nations and the workability of international law.

After almost 40 years of policy, the United States has decided to no longer accept compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court. The policy change, instituted to "protect our vital interests" was not a carefully studied move - it was a panicked "bail out" brought about by the formal charges of the Nicaraguan government.

Nicaragua alleges that the United States is illegally supporting anti-government rebels. Since the United States could not get the case dismissed (only the American judge on a panel of 15 voted for dismissal), it decided to ignore the court altogether rather than accept the risk of being judged "wrong."

U.S. accusations that Cuba and the Soviet Union are using the court as a "political weapon" may be true. No doubt, though, these countries got their ideas on use from the United States.

At the height of the Cold War between 1950 and 1955, the United States brought seven separate suits to the World Court - four against the U.S.S.R., one each against Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria

At the time, the United States used the court cases to emphasize to the world the uncooperative nature of the Eastern countries. The United States implied that the defending countries knew that they were "wrong," otherwise they would have submitted to judgment by an impartial jury. At the time, the U.S. stood tall and virtuous, unquestionably committed to the democratic principles of an impartial trial by peers.

Now, only 30 years later, the United States has resorted to the tactics of the countries it opposes. Although the tiny country of Nicaragua would probably have preferred a judicial outcome, forcing the United States to eat its words of the Cold War period is some accomplishment.

Reversal of the U.S. World Court policy is just one more indication that the United States no longer leads in the spirit of international compromise. At best, it follows reluctantly.

'Star Wars' plan for defense, not offense

With the Geneva conference between President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev quickly approaching, America's greatest bargaining chip, the Strategic Defense Initiative, has been thrust into the limelight.

The liberal press, confused "experts" and left-of-center politicians have had a heyday twisting facts and misleading the truthstarved public. Even the Soviet Union has launched a massive propaganda program trying to make America look bad for wanting to defend itself.

The whole problem began when somebody coined the term, "Star Wars" for the Strategic Defense Initiative. This led to negative connotations ranging from fairytale beliefs to the idea that Star Wars was an offensive weapon.

Critics believe the whole concept of Star Wars is impossible and that completion of such a system would be decades away. Actual completion of Star Wars isn't planned until the mid-1990s, and there are those who believe that Star Wars will never be developed - that it is impossible to build such a defense weapon.

Many also believed that man would never fly and pessimists scoffed at the possibility of man traveling to the moon. It's interesting that the Soviets are so upset over a defense system that "could never work."

Many oppose Star Wars simply because they feel there is no need for it. They feel our current deterrence strategy is sufficient. True, the Mutual Assured Destruction doctrine, or MAD, has worked. But frankly, I don't rest easy on the assumption that peace between the superpowers will continue as long as they each have the ability to wipe one another off the face of the planet.

Reagan equates the MAD doctrine to two people pointing cocked pistols at each other. Why do you think they call it MAD?

What must be understood is that Star Wars is an anti-nuclear weapon; it kills weapons, not people. It's targets are ballistic missiles heading toward the United States. It can do this without triggering nuclear explosions because the core of the defense plan is based on laser technology.

Cost has concerned many, and rightly so because of the United State's staggering deficit, but as a defense system, Star Wars is not expensive. Estimates range from $25 billion to $60 billion. The system could become cost-effective as it could render expensive defensive hardware obsolete.

Also, who can place a price on the security of a nation? How do you set a value on millions of lives?

Some individuals say that current research and development, not to mention the implementation, of Star Wars would violate the Strategic Arms Limitations Treaty. This agreement states that neither country will develop more ABM systems. True, implementation of the Star Wars project would violate this, but the Soviet Union already is guilty of violating it.

U.S. intelligence reports indicate the Soviets are busy developing an anti-ballistic missile system mounted on mobile-tracked vehicles. This would compliment an ABM base already stationed outside Moscow.

Thursday, October 10, 1985 - 4

Opponents of Star Wars argue that we should not take war into space, but it's too late. The Soviets have been working on antisatellite weapons for a number of years. Also, nearly all intercontinental ballistic missiles leave the earth's atmosphere and travel through space before crashing back to earth. Modern warfare already incorporates space as a battlefield.

Attention needs to be focused on the growing number of nations that will soon have the atomic weapons with delivery systems capable of putting America in their sights. Do you think some of these pirate nations led by erratic leaders such as Libya's Muammar Qaddafi or Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini actually have an understanding of MAD? Do you think they would care about bringing on their own destruction? Remember, many religious fanatics want to die for a cause.

I think the biggest argument in favor of Star Wars is knowing we have the capability to knock down an incoming missile instead of watching it crash to the ground and altering life as we know it.

Many are saying that you can't defend yourself against nuclear weapons. What scares me is that the Soviets are among those who would like us to believe this.

Trash can above flag disgraceful

I felt compelled to respond after reading Wayne Price's editorial in the Oct. 8 Collegian. I was immediately appalled at the situation described in Price's editorial.

It was not that someone, presumably a student, had somehow managed to place a garbage can on top of the Anderson Hall flagpole. This was a harmless practical joke, and tolerably funny as such things go.

No, what I cannot stomach is the fact that our nation's flag was hoisted under such a device. In this nation we do not allow any other banner or symbol to be raised higher than "Old Glory." In fact, to do so is a federal offense. It then indicates a sad state of affairs indeed when those in charge of this University allow a waste can to take a position of prominence over our country's flag. Better that the flag not be flown than to display it in such a manner.

It is also tragic that the great resources of this University (which students and the taxpayers pay a great deal to support) cannot undo what a few unaided students seem to have done. Congratulations gentlemen. You have demonstrated that the unbending ritual of this University will not be altered by a student prank. You only had to disgrace your country's flag to do so. But then, wheels of bureaucracy have long been deaf to such considerations.

This outrage cannot be blamed soley on whomever raises the flag every morning. The highest officials of our University supposedly work at Anderson, yet none bothered to correct this abomination. Such a careless attitude one might expect from the Collegian and a good part of the student body, but not from the University administration.

Use bike helmets

This letter concerns my friend and cycling partner Michael Newton, graduate in physics. In the article concerning his accident, "Bicycle mishap causes student's critical injury," in the Oct. 9 Collegian, Capt. Charles Beckom of the KSU Police Department was quoted as saying that this was a very freak accident.

This is misleading because these types of accidents are increasing as interest in cycling increases. They are not as uncommon as one might think. I strongly urge that something be learned from my good friend's tragic misfortune. Mike was not wearing his helmet. Bicycle helmets save lives! As a licensed racer I have witnessed devastating crashes that only amounted to sore bodies or even broken bones, but not fatal accidents, because helmets were worn.

As bicycle awareness increases, I see more and more cyclists on the road (and offroad) enjoying this sport, unaware of the potential dangers involved. It is essential that cyclists of all levels become helmet conscious to end these unnecessary misfortunes. The message is simple - if you ride a bicycle, wear a helmet.

Center's parking lot fees too high

Well, it looks like the students are taking it in the shorts again. Thanks to the Council on Parking, Traffic and Police Operations we now have to pay to use the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

I just can't understand the rationale behind spending $120,000 for the new parking lot. Sure it looks nicer, but we go to the rec complex to exercise, not to admire the parking lots. By my estimation, only about 40 more parking spaces were created. That figures out to be about $3,000 per new parking space and they don't look like $3,000 parking spaces to me. Surely the $120,000 could have been spent on something more cost-effective.

Until a week ago, we put up with limited parking at the rec complex because of the new parking lot construction, only to find out that we can't use it without a permit. It would have been nice if the new parking lot would have been completed before the fall semester began so we could get a full year's use out of our parking permits. Students graduating in December will really be left out in the cold unless they want to buy a parking permit for only one month's use.

But I guess we don't have to buy a parking permit. We can park on the unpaved area west of the intramural fields and battle the elements. It should be pretty exciting with the increased numbers of people who will be parking there. We'll be sliding around in the snow, getting stuck, and running into each other. Any way you look at it the students will

Marching band to perform at playoffs

By LESLIE STOKES Collegian Reporter

The K-State Marching Band has been invited to perform Friday night at the third game of the American League Playoffs in Kansas City, Mo.

The band will play a 25-minute pregame show before the 7:30 p.m. Kansas City Royals vs. Toronto Blue Jays game.

The band was chosen to perform because the Kansas City Royals' administration office has heard good reviews, said Steve Randazzo, member of the public relations staff for the Royals. Randazzo said it also looks good for the Royals to have a local group perform.

"I'm very pleased that they think of us when there are only three playoff games in Kansas City," said Royals' staff cites 'good reviews'

Stan Finck, assistant professor of music and director of bands. "I believe this is a strong opportunity to promote K-State."

Finck said the band will play five tunes, three of which will be done in marching formation drills.

Two of the drills, "Night Hawk" and the "Cats" medley, were performed during last weeks' homecoming halftime show.

The other songs to be performed are "I'm So Excited," "Boogie Down" and a drum feature to "New Country."

The band will also play the Canadian national anthem, "Oh, Canada." "The Star-Spangled Banner" will be sung, Finck said.

The University of Kansas marching band has also been invited to play for the playoff game scheduled for 3 p.m. Sunday.

Finck said the band would be performing in the outfield on the artificial turf.

"Because the outfield has no yardlines, it will be necessary to mark the yardlines with rope.

"The public relations department at Royals Stadium is concerned about the rope lines affecting the attractiveness of the stadium," Finck said. The band will use thin rope the audience cannot detect.

The band will depart for Kansas City, Mo., at noon on Friday so they can make a 3:30 p.m. rehearsal on the baseball field, Finck said. Finck said the current marching band has never played on a baseball field.

"The last time the band played on a baseball field was for the Kansas City Royals playoffs in 1976," Matt Hinkin, senior in radio and television, said. "This performance is an honor and definitely one of the highlights in my five years in marching band."

"It's important that we get the band psyched," said Karlene Gieber, drum major and senior in computer engineering technology. "After all, there is a possibility we will be on national television."

Noah's ark explorer to present slide show

By The Collegian Staff

Slides from a climbing expedition to Mount Ararat — a place believed by many to be the final resting place of Noah's ark — will be presented at noon today in the Union Catskeller.

Brian Fisher, junior in geography and member of the climbing team, will be the featured speaker. This is Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee's first lecture of the semester from the "Let's Talk About It" series.

Fisher, along with 23 others, began the exploration to Dogubhazit, Turkey, in August and saw a "boat shaped object" on the side of Mount Ararat around the 5,000 foot elevation point, he said.

"We were about 15 miles away, but we could see it on the mountain," Fisher said. "It does look like a boat and it looks like it's about 450 feet long. It corresponds very closely to the ark as described in the Bible."

"The entire committee thought it would be interesting and a nice change of pace," said Susan Bender, graduate in journalism and mass communications and program adviser. "At the same time, it will be very informative and entertaining."

San Diego's mayor must quit position

By The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Mayor Roger Hedgecock was convicted Wednesday of 13 charges including conspiracy and perjury in a scheme to illegally finance his 1983 mayoral campaign. The verdict means he must forfeit his job as head of the nation's eighth-largest city.

The Superior Court jury returned the verdict midway through the seventh day of its deliberations in the mayor's retrial.

Hedgecock, 39, sat quietly with his hands folded on a desk next to defense attorney Oscar Goodman as the clerk read the jury's decision in the packed court room.

Under state and local laws, Hedgecock must give up the office when judgment is entered at sentencing, regardless of whether an appeal is pending. No date was immediately set for sentencing, which could include a prison term.

The 12-member jury received the case last Thursday following a two-month retrial.

Hedgecock was found guilty of 13 of the 16 charges against him, including the conspiracy count accusing him of plotting with political backers to funnel corporate money into his campaign. City laws prohibit individual campaign donations in excess of $250 and prohibit campaign contributions from corporations.

He was acquitted of a misdemeanor conflict of interest charge involving bidding on a development project and two of the 14 felony perjury counts. The perjury counts stem from what prosecutors claimed were deliberate ommissions on state political disclosure forms to cover up the campaign-financing conspiracy.

Each of the felony charges carries a prison term. A single conviction carries a maximum term of four years and conviction on more than one count carries a maximum term of eight years.

Prosecutors said more than $350,000 was funneled into Hedgecock's 1983 campaign from the now-bankrupt J. David & Co., which laundered the funds through a political consulting firm.

Hedgecock said he was unaware that money from J. David & Co. funded the political consulting firm he retained for his 1983 campaign.

Hedgecock escaped conviction in his first trial in February when the jury deadlocked 11-1 for conviction.

A key prosecution witness in both trials was businessman Harvey Schuster, who testified that Hedgecock told him in November 1981 that Dominelli had agreed to bankroll Shepard's consulting firm to help Hedgecock become mayor.

Schuster's testimony was the only evidence that Hedgecock had direct knowledge of the alleged conspiracy.

Area racial viewpoints worries Jewish leaders

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jewish leaders from the Midwest will meet here today to discuss strategies to counter anti-Semitic viewpoints being disseminated in rural areas by some right-wing groups.

David Goldstein, executive director of the Jewish Community Relations Bureau in Kansas City, acknowledged that a meeting would be held here today but declined to reveal the time or location. Similar meetings have been held in Iowa, including one at Des Moines last week attended by about 250 people.

There has been growing concern among Jews about hate groups spreading their contention that part of the nation's farm crisis stems from what they say is a Jewish conspiracy that has taken control of America's finances.

Goldstein calls the increase in anti-Semitic activity "the most serious threat to American Jewry I can recall in my career."

Administrators, employees learn bomb safety methods

By TOM PERRIN Staff Writer

200 University About administrators and secretaries attended sessions on how to deal with bomb threats Wednesday in the K-State Union.

The sessions were organized as a public service through a joint effort of the KSU Police Department, the Riley County Police Department and Fort Riley Security Authorities in conjunction with the American Society for Industrial Security.

Presentations were made by Sgt. Stephen Cutler of the RCPD and Thomas Ballowe, chief of physical security in the crime division at Fort Riley. Cutler and Ballowe attempted to educate those attending the sessions on how to best react and classify bomb threat situations.

In dealing with any bomb threat situation, Cutler said safety should be the No. 1 priority.

"The thing you have to remember is 'safety is paramount," Cutler said. "People's lives come first."

Separate presentations, one in the morning for secretaries and another in the afternoon for administrators,

In the afternoon session, Ballowe shared with administrators much of the information given to secretaries in the morning. Ballowe said educating secretaries is important because secretaries are the first people to communicate with a person giving a bomb threat over the telephone.

Cutler stressed to administrators the importance of establishing an organization among workers to deal with bomb threats. An established procedure in dealing effectively with each situation is necessary, Cutler

Cutler outlined a three-step procedure in handling bomb threat telephone calls. The first step is the actual process of answering the telephone call. The second step involves the response to the phone call from the secretary and administrator. The third is the "team effort" in reacting to the situation and solving the bomb threat problem.

If a bomb is suspected, police and fire officials will not conduct the actual search for the bomb. Cutler said the people who work in the building suspected of containing a bomb should conduct the search. The people who work in the building can better recognize what isn't familiar to the surroundings and what could possibly be a bomb, Cutler said.

"We are there to assist (with the search)," Cutler said. "We will not search."

Cutler said while bomb threats should be taken seriously, people should not be paranoid about the possibility of a bomb.

"(Bomb threats) are not something to lose sleep over, but something to be concerned about," Cutler said.

After slaughtering, hanging cattle carcasses are sprayed by Brian Peterson, senior in animal sciences and industry, before being moved to refrigerators. Cattle are slaughtered every Tuesday.

K-State Meat Lab: A Cut Above

If hamburger could talk, it would have quite a story to tell.

The story would begin with a suckling calf (or maybe a baby lamb or pig in some cases) on the farm and before hitting the counter, it would go through many stages.

Being grain fed to the proper marketing weight is the next stage in the steer's life story. Upon reaching the proper weight, the animal is sold. At the packing plant, it goes through the stages of being processed to the end result — hamburger, steaks or other meat products.

From suckling calf to the feed lot, most market cattle are less than 2 years old when they reach the ideal market weight—between 1,000 to 1,300 pounds, said Melvin Hunt, professor of animal sciences and industry and meat processing lab instructor.

The marketing process begins when a farmer decides to sell his animals. The time it takes to sell the animals and the distance they are moved can affect the end product, Hunt said.

After the packer receives the animal, they will process it at their plant as soon as possible.

An ante-mortem (live) inspection must be passed before an animal is killed, Hunt said. Post-mortem inspections of the animal must be passed throughout the process.

During the stages of processing, United States Department of Agriculture inspectors make necessary required inspections of the carcasses.

Weber Hall's facilities are one of many throughout the state where slaughtering and meat processing take place. At Weber, students take part in this process through the meat processing class and lab.

"Our plant is a federally inspected meat plant," Hunt said. An inspector is assigned to the plant to see the animals live, as well as to see the carcasses — the cuts and parts at various stages.

The inspector is not assigned soley to the K-State meat plant but to other federal places in the area, Hunt said.

In order to be an inspector, one must be a licensed veterinarian. Because of this fact, some of the University's vet students are allowed to come in and help in the inspection as a part of their training.

The students enrolled in the processing class take the animal from the immovable state, remove the hide and remove and identify the internal organs. The students also learn the edible and non-edible parts of the carcass, as well as the sanitation necessary to convert it to a wholesome edible

"Wholesome" is the certain requirement to be met in order for the carcass to be deemed "wholesome" by the USDA, Hunt said.

Once the ante-mortem inspection is passed, the slaughtering process begins by immobilizing the animal and removing its blood. Removal of the animal's hair and hide follows this step. Most all inedible parts, primarily the hair, hide, bone and some internal organs of the animal, are used as byproducts.

A student trims fat from a piece of meat while preparing it for sale.

The by-product processing is "a whole story in itself," Hunt said. Some of the byproducts go to pharmaceutical use such as insulin. Others go into hand creams and are additives to a wide variety of products.

Once these steps are finished, the students are left with a chilled carcass ready for fabrication — the breaking up of the carcass into large or small parts.

The carcass is then sub-divided into wholesale cuts, and broken down to smaller sub-primal cuts. In these divisions, the tender parts are separated from those less tender. After the carcass is cut into steaks and roasts, the remaining carcass will then be ground into hamburger or meat processed products (frankfurters, etc.).

Steaks and roasts are then wrapped in freezer paper (which is opaque) and frozen. The end products are sold at meat lab sales Friday afternoons, Hunt said.

In the lab, the students work and operate as groups, Hunt said. Some sections of the lab are demonstrations, while other sections require students to do the work.

"The class is good for anyone — even those not interested in animal science because it takes the animal from off the hoof to a cut of meat, like a steak that a consumer buys," said Mark Wulfkuhle, senior in animal sciences and industry and past student of the class.

With Kansas being one of the leading states in the livestock and meat industries, and with these industries being the largest in the state, converting a carcass to meat, "until you have the experience firsthand, is hard to imagine," Hunt said.

Joe Fultz, junior in business and member of the meats lab team, works on breaking down a piece of beef so it can be divided into wholesale and sub-primal cuts. These divisions separate the tender parts from the less tender parts.

Ginny Spokes, sophomore in physical education, removes a rack of wrapped steaks and roasts for sale at the meat sales counter in Weber Hall.

Bon Ton, 'King' provide rock 'n' roll

By BEN PEASE Collegian Reviewer

Manhattan was treated first-hand to rock 'n' roll of a different genre Tuesday night. An Aggieville bar was the site of an accordion invasion as two bands took the stage to rock (yes, rock) the house.

Music Review

Sporting five members, including drums, bass, horns and an accordion (or Belly-Steinway, as it was called on their playbill), Bon Ton hit the audience with a flurry of up-tempo tunes. Donned in white tuxedos, the band played songs that were jazzy, Bands' performances go accordian'ly songs that rocked and songs that reminded listeners of a barmitzvah.

However, the sound was always crisp and professional, though at times the horn solos were not much more exciting than those heard in a junior high jazz band. But the band's overall effect was very refreshing and the crowd was responsive.

After a brief intermission, the main event took the stage. And what an event it was. For the next couple of hours, the audience was transported south of the border by the self-proclaimed "Tex-Mex-Rex"

- Joe "King" Corrasco.

Joe and his musical cohorts treated the audience to a brand of rock 'n' roll rarely heard in Manhattan. The style commonly referred to as Tex-Mex combines some of the chord progressions common in Spanish and Mexican music with the driving beat and distorted guitar sounds of American rock 'n' roll.

As did Bon Ton, Joe's band included an accordion player. And while the rest of the band hammered out their parts, the accordion could

ffices making move to new locations

By The Collegian Staff

A program to group University finance offices in the northeast part of Anderson Hall and student services offices in the northwest part began Tuesday.

The total cost of the two- to threephase move is still undetermined, said Helen Cooper, University space analyst, because preliminary estimates listed more changes than were approved.

The first phase of office shuffling includes moving University attorney Richard Seaton's office in Anderson

108A to Anderson 111, 111A and 111B. Seaton will share the office with new University attorney Dorothy Thompson. Thompson has been temporarily housed in Anderson

Robert Kruh, dean of the graduate school and associate provost, will move into Seaton's vacated office from his office in Fairchild Hall.

New Student Programs will relocate from Anderson 111, 111A and 111B to Anderson 112 and 111E, formerly the director of communications' offices.

Communications will occupy

Anderson 106B and 108 until the second phase of the relocation program is completed.

The staff of the vice president of Educational and Student Services will relocate from Anderson 104, 104A and 104B to Anderson 122, 122A, 122B and 122C, previously University Facilities offices.

George Miller, vice president for administration and finance, will use student services' old offices.

The second phase of the relocation is still in the planning stage, Cooper said. Under consideration 'is the relocation of additional Educational and Student services staff and the University's budget office.

Moving the campus post office in Anderson was considered but later rejected because of cost and difficulty in finding an alternate location, Cooper said.

The first phase moves should be completed within a week, she said. Educational and Students Services personnel are scheduled to be in their new offices within two weeks. Administration and Finances staff should be moved by Nov. 1, Cooper

Toronto rally nips KC, 6-5

By The Associated Press

TORONTO — Al Oliver slapped a single to left field with two outs in the 10th inning, driving home Lloyd Moseby from second base and capping a two-run rally off Kansas City relief ace Dan Quisenberry that gave the Toronto Blue Jays a 6-5 victory Wednesday and a commanding two-game lead in the American League playoffs.

Moseby had been the center of controversy in the top of the 10th, when Kansas City scored to take a 5-4 lead.

But the quick turnaround in the Blue Jays' fortunes sent the bestof-seven series to Kansas City for Game 3 Friday night with the Royals in an unenviable position.

The Royals started as if they would easily snap their nine-game postseason losing streak, taking an early 3-0 lead. But this game was full of twists, and the 10th inning was the most dramatic of all.

Willie Wilson scored from second base when center fielder Moseby trapped Frank White's single with two outs in the top of the inning, giving Kansas City the lead for the second time.

White hit a hard liner up the middle. Moseby came charging in, reached down and scooped up the ball, raising his glove as if he had made the catch.

Second base umpire Ted Hendry ran toward Moseby but did not make an immediate call. Hendry looked toward crew chief Dave Phillips, who was on the right-field line, for help, and Phillips waved that Moseby had trapped the ball.

While all this was happening,

Wilson, who led off the 10th with a single and stole second, scampered

But in the bottom of the 10th, the Blue Jays showed their character. Tony Fernandez led off with a bouncer that shortstop Onix Concepcion grabbed, but double-clutched and threw late to first for an infield hit. Fernandez moved to second on a groundout by Damaso Garcia and scored to tie the game

5-5 when Moseby singled to right.
With Bell at the plate, Moseby got to second when first baseman Steve Balboni failed to handle a pickoff throw by Quisenberry.

After Bell flied to center, Oliver slapped an opposite-field single to left, and the speedy Moseby scored easily ahead of the throw from Lonnie Smith.

Reliever Tom Henke, who gave up a tying home run to pinch-hitter Pat Sheridan in the top of the ninth, got the victory, while Quisenberry took the loss.

For a moment, it looked as if the Blue Jays would win in nine

Moseby singled to ignite an eighth-inning rally and scored on a sacrifice fly by George Bell to give Toronto a 4-3 lead.

But in the top of the ninth inning,
Henke failed to protect that lead.
On a 2-2 pitch, Sheridan homered to right field to tie the score, 4-4.

A hit batter seemed to rile the Blue Jays in the sixth, and they quickly struck for two runs that made it 3-3.

With two outs, Bell was hit in the side by Kansas City starter Bud single that moved Bell to second, and Black bounced a wild pitch that put runners on second and third. At that pint, Cox sent Lou Thornton in to run for Johnson.

Cliff Johnson followed with a easily ahead of Smith's throw.

Jesse Barfield battled Black to a full count then hit a bouncer up the middle for a single that tied the score.

Wilson had shaken the Royals out of their doldrums in the third inning.

Buddy Biancalana led off with a single off Toronto starter Jimmy Key and took second as Smith grounded out. Wilson then lined an 0-2 pitch into the left-center field seats for a home run.

Key struck out Balboni to get out of a two-on, two-out jam later in the third, but Kansas City drove him from the mound the next inning

Darryl Motley walked on a 3-2 pitch and Sundberg followed with a double into right-center, scoring Motley Biancalana sacrificed Sundberg to third and Cox brought in Dennis Lamp, 11-0 this year. Lamp retired 11 Royals in a row before leaving the game in the seventh.

The Blue Jays scored in their half of the fourth to make it 3-1.

With one out, Bell hit a bouncer that caught third baseman George Brett between hops, and Brett dropped the ball for an error. Johnson then hit a ball just inside the left-field line that rolled into the corner.

Coach Jimmy Williams waved for Bell to stop at third, but Bell ran through the sign and scored easily ahead of Smith's throw.

Remember the 10-0 defeat the favored Chicago Cubs dealt the San Diego Padres in the first game of last year's National League Championship Series?

The Cubs totally dominated San Diego in that game and went on to win the second game at Chicago's Wrigley Field as well. The eventual winners in that five-game series though, were the Padres, who swept three straight games at San Diego Jack Murphy Stadium.

In the 1981 American League Championship Series, the California Angels played the first two games at Anaheim Stadium and won both to take a two gamesto-none lead over the Milwaukee Brewers. However, Milwaukee came back to win that five-game series, sweeping the final three games at Milwaukee's County

There's a point to be made here regarding the 1985 Kansas City Royals and their current playoff series against the Toronto Blue Jays. The Royals may be down two games to none, but they are not out until the final nail has been driven into their coffin.

Stadium.

Other teams, like the Padres and Brewers, have come back from similar deficits. The Royals can too. Especially since this year's playoffs have been expanded to a best-of-seven format from a best-

Nobody is trying to pretend that coming back from a deficit in a playoff series is easy. It isn't. This year's Kansas City Royals, however, have been just the type of team that can turn the trick.

All year long, the Royals have been digging holes for themselves, making things as hard as possible. But time and again Kansas City has climbed right out of the grave, played superb baseball and beaten anyone foolish enough to stand in their way. They've done it before and they may do it again.

In game one, Toronto pitcher Dave Stieb, the AL leader in earned run average, stopped KC hitters cold, except for George Brett who always seems to rise to the occasion in the playoffs.

Kansas City threw away game two against Toronto, snatching defeat from the jaws of victory. Shoddy fielding plays in the 10th inning handed Toronto a second consecutive victory.

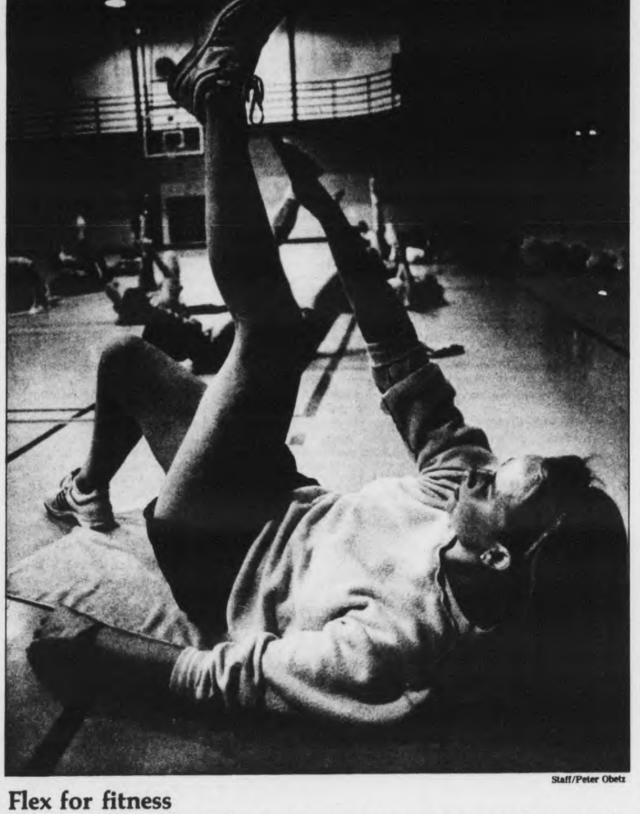

If someone who hadn't followed the Royals all year long watched games one and two, he could easily come to the conclusion that the Royals don't even belong in the playoffs this year.

Throughout the year though, the Royals have had a way of sinking to the depths of bad baseball and then rising up when people are ready to count them out.

Kansas City fell as far as 7½ games back of California in June, only to come back and win the division title.

The Royals would one week lose to the likes of the Seattle Mariners, Texas Rangers and Minnesota Twins — among baseball's worst teams — only to come back and beat good teams like the Angels, Blue Jays and New York Yankees when they had to.

"It was exciting when we found out. The team went up on stage and they were recognized as the No. 1 "Alan Arwine (senior in physics) was recognized as a second team All-American and that's neat."

Waiting for several months to get results for the competition is one of the nail-biting experiences team members are forced to live with.

"It's certainly hard on the shooters. The problem was this year the results actually changed," Krimmer said. "It takes so long for the NRA (National Rifle Association) to tabulate these things and the results changed several times in the last two weeks just prior to the announcement."

One reason the announcements take so long is because there are several different categories to judge. "There is an open competition,

"There is an open competition, ROTC competition, NCAA competition and then there is scholarship competition," Krimmer said.

Sgt. Larry Knight, rifle team coach, said the team enjoys competing in the ROTC category more than other categories.

"(In non-NCAA competition) there is less red tape and it makes it a much more enjoyable sport," Knight said.

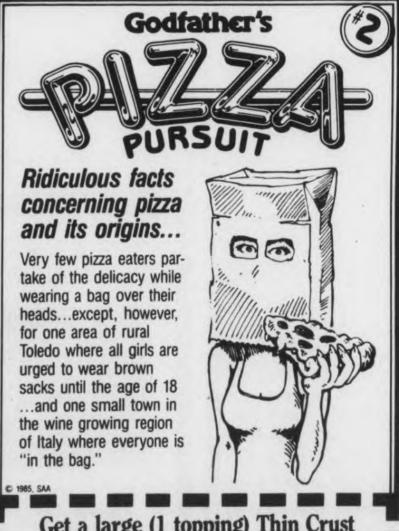

The rifle team practices in the basement of the Military Science building for several hours on Tuesday evenings. However, in order to be on the team, members must be enrolled in basic riflery—an ROTC course—so the team can meet as a class.

The rifle team is made up of members from the rifle club, which is sponsored by ROTC. Krimmer said determining who makes the team is not an easy task.

"There is some controversy over that," he said. "Last year they were simply selected based on the coaches' evaluation.

"This year we've tried something different and we're not sure it's going to work. But for the first match, since we had a lot of brand new people in the club, we decided to have tryouts. The people we thought would make the team made the team and there were no surprises.'

During competition, the competitors shoot standing, kneeling and prone (lying flat). They shoot at four targets in each position. Each target has 10 bull's-eyes located on the perimeter and two practice bull's-eyes located in the center.

A shooter can take as many shots at the practice bull's-eye as he chooses. However, he can only shoot one bullet at the perimeter bull's-eye. This gives the shooter 120 rounds per full course.

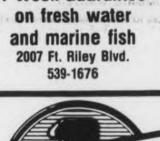

The rifle team has won the national title six times. The last time was in 1966. National championship team members include Tim Putnam, senior in management; Gordon Sandercox, senior in social science; Andrew Vikman, senior in geology; and Arwine.

Team alternates were Doug Torok, junior in business administration; Mike Woodson, sophomore in correctional administration; Jerry Judy, sophomore in business; and Stephanie Bowersock, junior in business.

Valenzuela hurls Dodgers to 4-1 win over Cardinals

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - Los Angeles stole an offensive ploy from St. Louis Wednesday night, and Fernando Valenzuela pitched the Dodgers to a 4-1 victory over John Tudor and the Cardinals in the first game of the 1985 National League playoffs.

Bill Madlock, acquired by the Dodgers five weeks ago in a trade with Pittsburgh, was the offensive catalyst in both innings in which the Dodgers scored.

Valenzuela worked 61/3 innings for his first victory in nearly a month, and the Dodgers scored their runs with the help of an error, a stolen base and a two-out the help of the bunt.

squeeze bunt, offensive tactics more commonly thought of as belonging to the Cardinals.

The opportunistic Cardinals, meanwhile, wasted one opportunity after another against Valenzuela.

The best-of-seven series, which opened before a Dodger Stadium crowd of 55,270, continues tonight with a match of right-handers -Orel Hershiser, 19-3, of the Dodgers against Joaquin Andujar, 21-12.

The Dodgers scored one run in the fourth on an error, a stolen base and a bloop single by Pedro Guerrero, then scored three more in the sixth and chased Tudor with pitch in Saturday's game. Leibrandt has been consistent all year long and seldom if ever has had two bad outings in a row. In other words, the Royals have a good chance to win on Saturday as well.

If this scenario holds true, Sunday's game five will be the pivotal game in the series. A win on Sunday and the Royals are in the driver's seat. This isn't intended to be any type of prediction that the Royals will come back and win the series with Toronto. It is intended only to say, as former New York Yankee manager and Hall members.

"They don't belong to the PLO. It is clear and obvious. ... We have no information about them. But the moment the Egyptian authorities agree to hand over these persons to us we will investigate" and, if circumstances warrant, "we will punish them."

The hijackers demanded the release of 50 Palestinians imprisoned in Israel after they seized control of the ship, heavily armed with guns and explosives. They threatened at various times during the two-day voyage to the Syrian coast and back to kill the people aboard and blow up the liner.

Capt. Gerardo de Rosa told the Italian Foreign Ministry before Craxi's news conference that all passengers and crew members were well and there had been no violence. The Egyptian Foreign Ministry also said none of the passengers had been harmed.

Craxi said de Rosa told him in a telephone conversation that no one saw Klinghoffer killed.

An aide to Craxi said later that the premier had called the ship and spoken to De Rosa minutes before he met with reporters. The aide said an inspection of the ship turned up Klinghoffer's passport but he could not be found.

Health care conflicts focus of performance

By The Collegian Staff

The play, "Make It Better," focusing on the problems nurses face on the job, will be performed at 8 tonight at the Holiday Inn Holidome.

The play is based on true accounts of what individual women have experienced working in the modern health care field, said Norma Parker, vice president of Kansas State Nurses' Association District 18.

Parker said the play is a portrayal of a series of characters dealing with professional problems faced only by women. The script comes from actual interviews conducted with nurses.

The play is in conjunction with the 73rd annual convention of KSNA. The actresses are members of the Women's Theatre Project from St. Paul, Minn.

"The purpose is two-fold," Parker said, "It's a benefit for the KSNA peer assistance program for chemically impaired nurses and secondly, the audience should get something personal from it." The term chemically impaired refers to individuals who have abused alcohol and drugs, she

The Senate approved and sent to the House a measure to temporarily extend the government's borrowing power by just this $5 billion. But House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Daniel Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said the Senate action was unnecessary - since the Treasury had already borrowed the money.

And, Rostenkowski said, the Treasury could borrow up to the full $15 billion with no additional congressional action - whereas the Senate legislation would have held this amount to $5 billion.

The Treasury action took the pressure off Congress to deal with the debt limit extention right away, congressional leaders suggested.

The balanced budget plan, endorsed by President Reagan, would dramatically alter the process by which government funds are authorized and spent, requiring that the president and Congress meet increasingly stringent yearly deficitreduction targets.

Government spending would have to match receipts beginning in fiscal year 1991 — and remain balanced from then on. The deficit for fiscal 1985, which ended Sept. 30, was about $210 billion.

Although denounced by Democratic leaders, the plan authored by Sens. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., ultimately picked up the support of 27 of the chamber's 47 Democrats.

Apartheid rioters kill 3 Africans

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Three more blacks were killed in anti-apartheid violence by fellow blacks, while white South Africans celebrated a national holiday at beaches, barbecues and parades Thursday.

Kruger Day, which honors the memory of 19th-century Afrikaner leader Paul Kruger, gave many whites a chance to take a long weekend to enjoy the warm southern hemisphere spring at beach resorts near Cape Town and Durban.

Not far from those beaches, the rioting that has wracked black townships for 14 months flared again in black and mixed-race townships.

Police said Thursday that three people were killed in the disturbances, bringing to five the number of deaths in the previous 24 hours.

In Durban's Umlazi black township, a mob of arsonists hurled a gasoline bomb into a house during the night, killing a three-week-old baby and injuring two black women, police headquarters in Pretoria said Thursday. A 19-year-old black man was shot in the face and hospitalized in serious condition, the police report said.

In another arson attack in Umlazi, a black woman died when her house went up in flames. The police said the residents appeared to be sup-porters of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid coalition.

More than 750 blacks have been killed in anti-apartheid riots that began on Sept. 4, 1984. About twothirds of the victims were shot by police and soldiers, with the rest killed by other blacks.

Ship's hijackers fly to Sicily; U.S. warplanes intercept jet

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - American warplanes intercepted an Egyptian aircraft carrying four Palestinian hijackers, forcing the plane to land in Sicily where the gunman have been handed over to Italian authorities, the White House spokesman said late Thursday night.

Larry Speakes said that "in a matter of hours" the United States would "pursue prompt extradition" so that prosecution could be undertaken here for the murder of 69-year-old American tourist Leon Klinghoffer.

"This operation was conducted without firing a shot," Larry Speakes told reporters. He said the four Palestinians, who hijacked the Italian luxury cruise ship Achille Lauro, were in Italian custody "for appropriate legal proceedings." Asked what the Palestinians said as they were taken from the plane, Speakes said, "I judge they probably had an expletive or two.' Speakes said President Reagan approved the interception plan at midday, giving general approval while visiting a Sara Lee baking plant in Chicago and giving final go-ahead

while returning to Washington, D.C., aboard Air Force One. The intercept took place immediately north of Egypt, above International waters of the Mediterranean as the hijackers hoped they were flying to safety. The Palestinians, who surrendered to Egyptian authorities on Wednesday, had bargained for "safe passage," and the airplane was heading for Tunisia.

"The president directed that U.S. forces intercept the aircraft," said Speakes, as part of a U.S. policy calling for "apprehension, prosecution and punishment," of terrorists.

"The United States will seek extradition on grounds an American citizen was murdered," Speakes said. "...Our law permits it."

He said there was no agreement with the Italian government on the extradition request. Italian authorities have said they want to prosecute, since the cruise liner was sailing under an Italian flag when the hijackers took control. A government source reinforced that view Thursday night.

U.S. F14 jets, coming off the carrier Saratoga, intercepted the Eygptian 737 aircraft as it headed toward Tunisia from Cairo, Speakes said.

Hall occupancy hits new low

More buildings could close

By MARGARET MAY Collegian Reporter

Residence Hall occupancy is at 87 percent - the lowest it has been since completion of existing halls, said Tom Frith, director of the Department of Housing, at the Housing Council meeting Thursday.

A committee has been formed to decide if any of the food centers or residence halls need to be closed next year, Frith said.

Although overall residence hall occupancy is down, Frith said he was pleased with the occupancy rate at Jardine and Putnam.

Jardine Terrace is 97 percent full, and 62 students were living in Putman Hall at the beginning of the year, he said. Thirty-two have moved into Putnam since then.

"We (housing) thought it would take about three years to get Putnam off the ground," Frith said, "but now I think by next year we will have it filled."

A new housing budget calling for an increase in residence hall rates has been proposed to the Housing Council. If accepted, the budget would have to be approved by the Kansas Board of Regents. Frith said the council would announce the amount of the rate increase at the next meeting if the budget is approved. Current residence hall rates are $990 per semester. The budget would also call for an increase in Jardine rates.

A problem concerning busing of school children was also discussed at the meeting.

Children of Jardine residents must now walk to Marlatt School because Jardine falls within the two-mile limit to get free busing, said Sheldon Klassen, senior in management and executive mayor of Jardine. The children are walking on a bike path to get to school if their parents are unable to drive them, he said.

Frith said a committee is working on the busing situation.

The problem arose because of redistricting upon completion of the Amanda Arnold school. Last year most Jardine children went to Eugene Field School, but now are in the Marlatt School district.

KU prepares for onslaught of K-Staters

By LEANNE STOWE Staff Writer

The University of Kansas will not ignore attempts to tear down the goal posts after the K-State vs. KU football game at KU Oct. 19, a KU official said Thursday.

Because the game usually illicits high emotions from fans, it is being treated as a sellout game and security officers will not be "turning the other cheek" while fans tear down the goal posts, said Floyd Temple, assistant director of athletics at KU.

"We are changing our attitude. We want everyone to know that we will not condone the tearing down of the goal posts," Temple

Temple said the athletic department has discussed the matter of pressing charges for goal post destruction, and KU and area courts have agreed to do everything they can to see that the guilty do not go unpunished. Security at the game will be beefed up no more than normal for a sellout game, said Jim Denney, KU chief of police.

"Quite frankly we're going to do all we normally do during a sellout game and that's give it everything we've got," Denney said.

Security at a game will differ from the manner in which K-State handles security, Denny said. He said the incident in Manhattan last year would not have any effect on their security.

He said there will be no coolers or cans, or objects that can be thrown taken into the

"We will have officers going through the crowd to confiscate booze and eject drunks," Denney said.

"We will be doing some very strict enforcement," he said. "We will enforce the drinking laws and be looking for people consuming alcohol. This includes tailgate parties where alcohol is being consumed.

"In addition, we also have an observation post in the pressbox and we videotape the crowd so that we can use it to identify persons," Denney said.

Lawrence will take its turn at hosting the highly emotional football game Oct. 19. Tickets are still available for the 1:30 p.m. kickoff at Memorial Stadium.

Aggieville riot — a solemn affair

By The Collegian Staff

One year later, on its first anniversary, students and the Riley County Police Department are still talking about the infamous "Aggieville Riot."

News of the riot, which occurred one year ago Sunday, spread nationwide through coverage by the Associated Press. Neither city nor University officials were pleased with the negative shadow cast on the University because of the violent celebration. A crowd of 8,000, many of whom were students excited about a 24-7 football victory over rival University of Kansas, congregated in Aggieville that evening.

The problem began after the game, when fans rushed onto the turf shouting, "goal post, goal post." Campus police using night sticks and mace, a chemical eyeirritant, guarded the south-end goal post.

Nearly six hours later, the celebration in Aggieville turned violent, after members of the crowd complained of eye irritations. It was discovered later that a "civilian" had ignited a can of tear gas near a local establishment.

A number of people, still angry about the use of mace as a defense by campus police at the game, began throwing beer bottles

Later, officers were not able to maintain control as the crowd rolled a car on its side, stole hats and radios from police and began throwing objects at the officers.

Under the same circumstances, the Riley County police would not act differently on the situation, said Les Beiler, assistant director of the RCPD.

"There were too many things to try to control that day," Beiler said. "There were too many people in Aggieville elated over winning against KU and there was too much booze consumed."

In the end, 23 people were arrested and seven officers were injured - including one officer who was stabbed.

Board serves city, students' joint interests

By JONIE R. TRUED Collegian Reporter

In response to the Aggieville "near-riot" one year ago Sunday, the Manhattan City Commission formed the Manhattan Task Force to provide suggestions on ways to avoid similar future disturbances.

One outcome of the task force was the establishment of a Manhattan Community Relations Board, which was formed in February.

The board, whose name was recently changed to the Manhattan Student Relations Board, is comprised of 16 representatives selected from various sectors of the community. The board's by-laws were passed by the commission Sept. 17. Pat Bosco, K-State's vice president for educational and student services and current board member, said he was "assigned to represent the University to serve as a communication link between K-State administration and the Student Relations Board." Bosco, along with Gene Cross, former vice president for University facilities, served on the original task force as the two permitted representatives from K-State's administrative offices.

"Part of the overall concern of the task force was communication," Bosco said. "This board can serve to better relationships between students and the city but it can't be the only one.

Bosco said the board has "a potential to be very helpful" but only to a degree. He said due to constant changes in the city and students, there needs to be an increasing amount of communication between the two.

Bosco described the board as "pro-active - making sure that through its members we can anticipate events and concerns before they happen.'

The board will serve as a "sounding board, a vehicle for improved communication,' which will also make recommendations to the city commission, Bosco said.

Currently, the board consists of 11 members, with representatives from Manhattan Christian College, Fort Riley, the Riley County Police Department, K-State

Vietnam may allow MIA searches

UNITED NATIONS - In what could be a major breakthrough in the search for Americans missing in action, a top-ranking Vietnamese Cabinet minister says his government is agreeable in principle to allowing U.S. excavation teams into the Hanoi area for the

Other official American and Vietnamese sources said Vietnam has agreed to a U.S. proposal that the countries carry out a joint survey and excavation of a crash site near Hanoi as an experiment.

The sources said the date and other details of the excavation have yet to be worked out.

Vo Dong Giang, a Cabinet minister without portfolio and the second-ranking official in the Foreign Ministry, told The Associated Press Wednesday that with regard to joint excavations: "In principle we are agreeable except in the crash sites where our security cannot permit foreigners to have access."

Giang disclosed for the first time details of Vietnam's three-part plan designed to settle the MIA issue within two years:

The Vietnamese will do the major part of the searches. - In cases where it is extremely difficult to reach crash sites such as those in deep water or in an abyss where cranes and other heavy equipment would be needed, Hanoi would ask the U.S. for help. Giang said his government was agreeable to joint excavations.

Shultz says Jordan needs weapons

WASHINGTON - Secretary of State George P. Shultz told Congress today that selling Jordan $1.9 billion of modern air defense weaponry represents a potent signal of American support and is "an absolute necessity" for success in the Mideast peace process.

But several members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee made clear they remain opposed to the sale and warned Shultz that in the absence of real movement in the peace process it may be

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., told Shultz that far from advancing peace, "the king puts a number of obstacles in the way of peace." "King Hussein has not said he won't move," Shultz said. "He is moving. He is already paying a price. He needs help." Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., noted that 20 senators have already co-sponsored a resolution of disapproval and said that if progress is not made, "you will fail in this effort." He urged that the sale be temporarily postponed.

But Shultz insisted, "The need to show we stand with King Hussein is present now.'

Testifying before the committee, Shultz acknowleged the United States probably will be called on to pay much of the cost of the sale of advanced warplanes and ground-to-air missiles.

Senate agrees to increase debt limit

WASHINGTON - After ending eight days of wrangling over a balanced budget plan, the Senate agreed to raise the national debt limit to more than $2 trillion Thursday night.

By 51-37, the Senate voted to increase the government's line of credit from its current $1.824 trillion to $2.078 trillion, enough to meet the government's borrowing needs for the next year.

The action came after the Senate completed several revisions to the balanced budget plan that was attached to the debt limit legislation on Wednesday. The House, in effect, agreed to the debt limit increase when it passed a budget blueprint on Aug. 1, but the addition of the budget plan in the Senate will require further action. Earlier Thursday, Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole angrily accused the Treasury Department of undermining efforts to pass the balanced-budget plan and displaying "no guts" with an emergency $5 billion auction that eased the government's credit crisis.

The balanced budget plan has been attached to legislation raising the government's borrowing authority - the national debt limit - to more than $2 trillion. The government has reached its current borrowing ceiling of $1.824 trillion and Dole was using the threat of government checks bouncing to spur action on the budget plan.

Cancer survivors suffer infertility

SALT LAKE CITY - Survivors of childhood cancers are 40 percent more likely not to marry and 50 percent more likely not to have children than are their brothers and sisters, says a new report by the National Cancer Institute.

The number of such cancer survivors is growing as improvements in cancer treatment that began in the 1970s have made childhood cancers easier to cure. That trend is expected to continue.

"I think we're going to see more people treated more aggressively, more surviving cancer, and more with fertility problems," said Julianne Byrne, one of the authors of the new report presented Wednesday at the annual meeting of the American Society of Human

Construction company accrues fine

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The Occupational Safety and Health Administration Thursday proposed $10,000 in fines against a company operating a crane that buckled atop a 38-story building, killing two workers in August.

OSHA announced the alleged violations against American Bridge Division of U.S. Steel Corp. in connection with the Aug. 9 accident at the construction site of the AT&T Town Pavilion in downtown Kansas City.

Three men, including the two who died, were in a bucket attached to one of two cranes operating on top of the building. A boom on a stiffleg derrick buckled, and the bucket fell between 100 and 120 feet to the 13th floor of the building.

The alleged violations of the Occupational Safety and Health Act involved willfully failing to follow safe operating procedures before and while the workers were being hoisted, according to a statement released by the U.S. Department of Labor office in Kansas City.

Two other violations, which OSHA labeled as serious, involved failing to adequately test all boom positions on the crane to assure that safe clearance would be maintained; and failing to advise construction workers about dangers of operating the equipment.

Also, the company was cited for failing to require the derrick operator to remain at the hoist controls while loads were being elevated.

Gaines, D-Augusta, delivered the harsh message during a presentation on the proposed 190-bed prison before the Special Committee on Ways and Means. He said the prison should be built in the Wichita area and called Ellsworth promoters of the project politically "naive."

Gaines said he thinks it will be impossible to get a majority of 63 votes in the House and 21 votes in the Senate for building the prison.

"I think you folks have been pretty damn naive about the way politics work in this state," Gaines said. "I don't think in a million years that you'll get 21 senators to go along with this thing."

Gaines' district includes the city of El Dorado, a leading contender for the prison location before the Joint Committee on State Building Construction selected the Ellsworth site in July. He made the remarks as Ellsworth officials offered to issue bonds for construction of the prison and then set up a lease-purchase agreement with the state.

'Old Blue Eyes' re-enters limelight

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. - After a 14-month absence spurred by an insulting remark from a state official, Frank Sinatra sang loud and clear that "Mac is back in town" before a sell-out casino audience in his home state.

Sinatra spoke little to the 550 people who paid $50 a ticket to see him Wednesday. But at the show's start, audience members chuckled when he asked, "Where have you been?"

Sinatra quickly launched into his set, including numbers by Cole Porter and Rodgers and Hart.

He also performed "Mac the Knife," and was given the biggest ovation of the evening when he boldly and clearly sang the last lyrics: "Mac is back in town."

He dedicated the hour-long performance to Nelson Riddle, the composer and arranger who died earlier this week.

In August 1984, Sinatra, a Hoboken native, vowed never to perform again in New Jersey after he was called an "obnoxious bully" by Casino Control Commissioner Joel Jacobson in the wake of an incident at an Atlantic City casino. In July, the 69-year-old entertainer settled his differences with Jacobson after the commissioner criticized cartoonist Garry Trudeau's satirical depiction of Sinatra in a series of "Doonesbury"

Professor studies television

By LESLIE STOKES Collegian Reporter

The television audience is abandoning prime time television and William Adams, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, is interested in finding out why.

In an attempt to give the networks an idea of what the viewing audience is looking for in programming, Adams is conducting research to classify programs.

Adams' research is called Q-Sort. The research requires students to classify various shows. A random sample of 115 shows from 1950 to the present are sorted by the students and placed into categories. So far, they have classified 42 types of programming including westerns, audience participation, sports and four types of family drama.

Adams said the National Association of Broadcasters is sponsoring the research and is interested in the results. Adams' system of program classification is the only one of its kind.

Adams said his interest in television programming was sparked by a threatening letter from NBC. The threat was a result of some critical articles Adams wrote about program cancellation. Copies of the articles were sent to NBC, ABC and CBS. NBC was the only network to reply. Adams said NBC executives wrote that his articles were interesting, but suggested that he discontinue his research.

"The articles were written for a magazine class I was taking and like a good journalist, I sent a copy to the networks," Adams said.

According to Adams' articles, networks are afraid to take risks. "They don't want to make the decisions so programming is done by statisticians and computers who so far aren't very good at it," Adams said. One article stated, "Networks run the same tests and offer the same programs that didn't work the year before. This is because no top executive is going to risk his six-figure salary by actually making a decision if he can help it."

Adams said the networks are related to the decrease in prime time audiences.

"The instability in TV scheduling - pre-emption and cancellation of programs - is frustrating for the viewer," he said. "People are tired of searching for shows."

In addition, Adams said limited choice in the types of shows has caused a decrease in prime time

"Soap operas, movies, situation comedies and detective shows make up 80 percent of the TV programming," he said. Networks base their programming on the belief that people will watch whatever is on - the least objectionable theory, Adams said.

In the article "Cancelled? Over My Dead Body!" Adams wrote that the average viewer doesn't care about the network's favorite programs. With more than 70 programs in prime time, a top-10 series isn't enough, viewers need at least 30 top shows.

"The networks will have to start satisfying the public more or they will lose their audiences," Adams said. "Now people can turn on cable or pop a tape in their VCR and watch whatever they want."

NBC is reworking its programming format and as a result, audience viewing has increased, he

According to other networks, NBC's "The Cosby Show" and "Miami Vice" were guaranteed to fail. "The Cosby Show" was expected to fail because it went back to the old family-format.

'The NBC researchers were right, 'The Cosby Show' and 'Miami Vice' are two of the top shows in prime time television," Adams said.

Growing vegetables as crops can mean secondary income

By TIM STRODA Collegian Reporter

Growing vegetables as a supplementary crop may be a viable option for many rural families.

For farm families in particular, growing vegetables is becoming a way to increase income without major capital outlay, said Charles Marr, extension horticulturist.

"Growing vegetables on a small scale has several advantages - a relatively small investment, conventional equipment and family labor," Marr said.

The first step in starting a small "commercial" operation is deciding what to grow. Sweet corn, asparagus, broccoli, cabbage, cauliflower and all types of melons can be grown in Kansas with a manageable amount of labor and resources, he said.

Marr said the trick to growing vegetables is deciding what can be sold, not what can be grown.

marketing agent. The ability to create your own market is important in any new business venture, but it is crucial in vegetables because surplus stocks can't be held," Marr

Vegetables are different from other agricultural products because the producer has more input into the price received for the product, he said. Producers must also look for an opportunity to creatively and effectively market their product, he said.

"With constant encouragement from health authorities, people are concerned with freshness and good quality in their diet," Marr said.

Marr said letting people know your vegetables have these qualities is very important in establishing a successful business.

There are several ways to do this, he said. Produce can be sold directly off the farm, from a roadside stand or at a farmer's market. Small grocery stores will sometimes buy produce after they've seen the product, Marr said.

Advertising can also be done in several ways, including small newspaper advertisements, short radio spots, bulletin boards, radio call-in shows, trade publications or merchant publications.

"Getting a local newspaper to do a feature story on your operation's service to the community can be great publicity," Marr said.

Producing vegetables on a small scale means getting involved in the whole spectrum of the industry. Production, shipping, handling and marketing must all be taken into consideration by the new producer.

"New producers should start with a limited number of crops and allow their operation to expand as the market in the area increases," he

Producers need to look at the bottom line and see if they can make a profit by growing vegetables, but they also need to be excited about the quality of product they have grown and make their customers feel they are getting a bargain, Marr Laid.

Lottery will benefit state

Kansas needs a lottery.

Even the attorney general thinks so. And if Kansas intends to keep up with the Joneses — Missouri, Nebraska and Colorado — action should be taken soon. A state-run lottery has many advantages that require consideration, the biggest of which is increased revenue for the state without higher taxes.

However, the refusal by the State Board of Education to endorse a state-run lottery is extremely foolish. There is no logical reason for the board to decline a new and potentially enormous source of income, unless it is possessed of the mentality it takes to deliberately do everything backward for the sake of spite.

Board of Education member Kathleen White would prefer to see sales taxes increased rather than see profits from a lottery, because, she said, it might take two years to see profit from a lottery while tax increases generate funds more quickly. The suggestion that raising taxes will make us a lot happier because it makes money appear faster by making it disappear quicker from our wallet is absurd.

The potential uses for lottery revenue offer promise for education, for state highways, for human-services programs — the list goes on and on.

Why, then, doesn't Kansas act? Perhaps the Bible Belt mentality prohibits the relatively painless fund raising that a lottery will provide. Or, perhaps it is apathy on the part of individuals who wait for everything to be done for them. Whatever the reason, it is clear unless officials are informed and pressured about the desire for a lottery, nothing will be done.

A lottery in Kansas does not mean Dodge City will become the Las Vegas of the Midwest. It means there will be more money for the state to spend on its residents, and there will be more money for one resident of the state of Kansas than he or she expected.

There is, of course, the greed motive, which makes any lottery a success — but there is nothing inherently wrong with someone taking a long shot at the big bucks. Daytime quiz shows and prime time soaps glorify it. It's the American Way.

Aggieville incident ensures exciting debate

Aggieville on Oct. 13, 1984 is always enjoyable to talk about.

What makes discussing the incident — the "riot" as it's commonly mislabeled — so prone to lively debate is the potential for all of us to become Freuds, to psychoanalyze the situation and pass blame on any and all we see fit

The Riley County Police Department blamed the students, students blamed RCPD and the University, while local neoprohibitionists, cursing alcohol for the total moral breakdown of society, blamed, of course, bar owners.

But to properly play devil's advocate and try to understand that night, one needs to rationally examine each of those groups.

The easiest group to begin with is the students, without whose participation there would be no such thing as the "I Survived the Aggieville Riot" T-shirt. The bottom line is that students had too much to drink, felt mistreated and went berserk.

Probably the best analogy to that night is a high school class with a substitute teacher for the day. There is some sheepish give-andtake between teacher and students and if the teacher fails in attempts to establish ground rules, the class takes over.

In a four-hour period that night, the RCPD attempted to establish new ground rules to a crowd of approximately 8,000 students, most of whom had consumed some amount of alcohol. Of course they failed.

That brings up the next groups — the University and RCPD.

Probably the most idiotic event of that whole day was the University's response to the tearing down of a goal post. While game announcer Jerry Payton, on childish executive orders from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, emphatically told students over loudspeakers to resist participation in a traditional act of victory and pride, K-State police decided to enforce such ignorance with tear gas.

While there is much disagreement to the goal post incident's affect on events later that night, it obviously did little for the University's image and even less for student-University trust. What's more, University officials could have exercised common sense and avoided the thing.

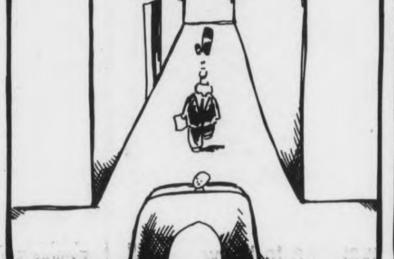

The latter also holds true for RCPD. Who knows where they came up with the notion to keep people on the sidewalks and off the streets. Where were 6,000 students supposed to go if all the bars were full? Sure some minor city ordinances would be broken and a vehicle probably rolled — something RCPD never seemed intent on enforcing in the past — but the mass standoff between students and police might have been avoided.

As for bar owners? They simply got the shaft. The bars, while overcrowded, still maintained some degree of order, something RCPD was unable to accomplish with their nightsticks. Events on Moro Street caused the mele, not the action in the backroom of Kite's Bar and Grille. And yet much of the blame and new city ordinances seem characteristic of the bars being at fault. The logic goes: Students were drunk, beer causes drunkenness and bars serve beer.

And to some extent the media, present company included, was also at fault for immediately coining the term "riot" and using the few photographs at hand to exemplify the entire evening. Yes, a police officer was stabbed, people arrested, windows broken and much debris thrown, but the opportunity to sensationalize the event, as the presence of the "Aggieville Riot" T-shirts suggests, was too great for many to pass up.

And finally, timing was a problem. Events that night paralleled the nationwide move to put restrictions on alcohol. Aggieville gave the do-gooders a big cache of ammunition to promote their cause against alcohol consumption.

The biggest problem I think, was a lack of resistance. Students could not resist acting like characters from "Lord of the Flies" when discovering the lack of police control. RCPD couldn't resist acting like the Little Apple SWAT Squad when the opportunity arose and city officials couldn't resist in blaming bar owners, when the problem was obvious on the Sunday following Oct. 13, 1984; there was simply a lack of common sense exercised and, more importantly, a lack of communication.

U.S. should develop moral foreign policy

A nation should maintain a foreign policy consistent with its interest. It is therefore reckless and ill-advised for a nation to structure a foreign policy on friendship alone. This is because — as the United States should have learned in Vietnam, Korea, the Philippines and Israel — friends change.

I believe it is in the interest of the United States to conduct a consistent moral foreign policy based on the inherent rights of people everywhere. I am told, however, that in decision-making circles of foreign policy, ivory tower moral arguments are not sufficient to conduct policy. I disagree.

I believe the moral question is of central importance to the success of this nation's foreign policy and I further believe that our foreign policy has failed most often when there is a failure to distinguish right and wrong.

In the late 1940s and early 1950s the United States identified two major interests in foreign policy. First, that it was, and still is, in the interest of the United States to maintain a clear and meaningful distinction to Communist oppression throughout the world. We succeeded at first by achieving the moral high ground, at least in Europe, with the Marshall Plan and the Berlin Airlift.

Next we decided it was in our interest to maintain strong allies to secure freedom throughout the world by containing what we viewed as the greatest threat to freedom. Suddenly there appeared the Rio Pact, NATO, the Central Treaty Organization, the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization and large support for dozens of nations dedicated, at the time, to freedom.

But since the inception of these interests we have far too often substituted our desire to distinguish our form of government from communism with an obsession of favoring anything anti-communist.

In reviewing the recent history of U.S. foreign policy it is easy to see the failures of such a rigidly dogmatic approach. A glaring example is in Southeast Asia where as early as 1946 Ho Chi Minh, later to become the leader of the North Vietnamese, pleaded for U.S. — not communist — help and intercession over the French bombing of city of Haiphong. Ho was dismissed by then Secretary of State Dean Acheson as just another "commie."

More recent is the failure of U.S. policy in Iran, where we allowed tradition and short-term security interests to blind us to the inevitable chaos. Also, in Nicaragua we supported for years a corrupt and violent government — only to act surprised when the people had had enough.

And as recently as Sept. 24 the United States protested, as a violation of territorial integrity, Libyan fighters crossing into Tunisian air-space. Yet less than two weeks later when the Israeli government, using U.S. fighters in direct violation of U.S. trade laws, not only entered Tunisian air-space, but destroyed targets and killed scores of people, the United States condoned the action.

We have concerned ourselves so much with the desire for instant gratification in foreign policy that we have seemingly lost sight of our original interests. In many instances we have become our own worst enemy.

It is as though lately we have become turned around to the point where now our foreign policy is dictating our interests. It therefore now seems to be our primary national interest to protect our foreign policy at any cost. And the cost of such protection, as the families of the hundreds of Marines murdered in Lebanon can tell you, can be extremely high.

The result has been an international environment more volatile and a foreign policy now so inconsistent as to baffle even the closest of followers. We fight an open war against, and restrict all trade to, the government of Nicaragua while at the same time carry on $2.3 billion in trade to the clearly racist, violent and regionally dangerous government in the Republic of South Africa.

The American people must shoulder a

Ine American people must shoulder a large part of the blame for allowing such an inconsistent and reckless foreign policy to proceed apace. As a people we have grown accustomed to the security found in the status quo. We too fear change. We don't take the time to understand how our government is behaving and the image America has among the citizens of the world.

We are pleased if we hear nothing of world turmoil. So our elected officials allow fuses to burn hoping to make it to the next election. Eventually, however, the laws of nature demand change, and complacency and comfort are rightfully shattered.

It is time to establish a foreign policy which once again creates an environment of choice for the citizens of the world. Not a choice between tyrants, but a choice between popular will, whatever that will may be, and dogmatic rigidity. An alternative between the freedom of choice and the slavery of predestination.

It is time to do what is morally right in our foreign policy, not because it is safe, not because it will have a predictable outcome, but simply because it is right.

For far too long we have been, as Robert Kennedy said, "clinging to a past that is already dying." Throughout the world this nation has an opportunity to help create a new beginning not only for the oppressed, but for American foreign policy as well. Whether or not we choose to be bold and accept this needed change is a decision we all must make.

Students to observe technical sciences

By BOB SCHEIBLER Collegian Reporter

Kansas and Missouri high school students will have a taste of the technical science programs offered by the University Saturday.

More than 500 high school students are expected to convene on campus for an Engineering and Science Day sponsored by the College of Engineering and the College of Arts and Sciences. Students from all Kansas and Missouri high schools have been invited to attend.

"We have been doing the engineering day for about the last 10 years, but this is the first time that we will have the engineering day and science day as a combined event and we hope that it will be mutually beneficial," said John Dollar, assistant dean of engineer-

Event intends to promote colleges

The purpose of the event is to promote the programs offered in engineering, physics, chemistry, computer science, math, geology and the biological sciences. In 1984 both the engineering and the science day were held on the same day, but were not connected with each other. Dollar said because the sponsors felt it worked well to have the events on the same day, they were combined into one event.

"I don't know if this will help either one of the programs, but that is not the point. The point is that we need to get students on this campus and once they get here we can divvy them up." said Don Smith, assistant to the dean of arts and sciences.

"I am new here and from what I understand, the two programs have fought against each other in the past and that is just plain foolish. We should be united in an effort to show that we have the best programs in undergraduate education

Both the engineering and science day programs will start in the morning with general assemblies. Representatives from admissions, financial aid and the Department of Housing will address the students. After the general assembly, the students will break into smaller interest groups. In the College of Engineering, there will be tours conducted by the Engineering Ambassadors.

"This is a good chance for high school students to get acquainted with K-State and get to know some of the people that they will be associated with when they come to K-State. It is also a good chance for us to show the facilities that we have available," Dollar said.

Chemist detects cancer by applying Ames test

By KAREN MEIS Collegian Reporter

Eighty percent of cancer cases should be preventable, a California biochemist told members of a symposium Thursday.

Bruce Ames, chairman of the department of chemistry at the University of California at Berkeley, discussed cancer and diet at a symposium sponsored by the Division of Biology. Ames developed the Ames test, a way to detect if a chemical is likely to cause cancer.

Ames said lung cancer, which is caused overwhelmingly by smoking, is the major cancer epidemic today. It constitutes 30 percent of the cancer cases and is surpassing breast cancer as the leading cancer disease in women. He said the rate of stomach, uterine and prostate cancer has fallen in the past few "Epidemiologists (those who study epidemics) have learned that different cancers are at different rates in different countries," Ames said.

For example, Ames said Japan has a high stomach cancer rate as compared to a low rate in the United States, the major factor being the dietary differences between the two

"All clues point to dietary factors," he said. "In some cases, watching one's diet is even more important than the smoking factor."

Ames said certain chemicals can cause cancer, and these chemicals are tested in animal experiments. The major limitation in performing such experiments, however, is the cost. Ames said one animal cancer test costs $200,000 and covers a span of two to three years. Therefore, drug companies cannot afford animal experiments for every drug they market.

"The world is full of carcinogens (cancer-causing agents), from frying foods to green plants," Ames said. "Cancer can differ in potency, so it is not enough to get frightened if something is labeled as a carcinogen. Regulatory agencies should look at the high risks and concentrate there, rather than subsidize tobacco farmers and be concerned with every little risk."

College students' average age increases

By BECKY WEBER Collegian Reporter

An increase in the average age of university students and an infusion of "adult students" in the classroom is altering the face of campuses across the nation.

The traditional student used to be 18-24 years old, said Ted Wischropp, director of development for the Division of Continuing Education.

"By 1990, the National Student Center for Education Statistics predicts that one out of every three students enrolled in higher education at least part time will be over 25 years of age," Wischropp said.

Oct. 13-19 is National Adult and Continuing Education Week. Continuing Education serves more than 30,000 adult students each year with credit and non-credit programs through community education, University for Man and other professional development programs.

"My concern is raising the level of awareness," Wischropp said. "We must keep serving the needs of the 18-24-year-olds, but the population is shifting. We must respond to their needs and we may have to respond differently."

LaVerne Lindsey, assistant provost of continuing education, said the continuing education programs are designed to meet the needs of the working class, such as teachers or other professionals who need training in their jobs. To meet their needs, continuing education takes the classes to the professionals because it is inconvenient for them to take time off for classes. Non-traditional study programs through television, correspondence courses or night classes are becoming more popular on and off campus.

Through continuing ed, the University is able to be directly responsive to the needs of society,' Lindsey said. "Adult and professional continuing education is big business all over the United States and all over the world."

Continuing education offers lifelong opportunities, Lindsey said. There are curriculums for all ages from infant swimming classes to computer training classes for per-

Bobbie Flaherty, director of conferences, said she sees continuing education moving into the mainstream of higher education.

"If we know of a professor who has expertise that would benefit a particular group of adults, we will market the program," Flaherty said. "Right now we are going out to them, but as awareness builds, those markets will come to us."

The class credit programs in continuing education are funded through federal grants and state appropriations, but the non-credit programs are self-supporting and rely on the tuition from classes to keep running. In 1984, continuing education was granted $500,000 for their credit pro-

credit programs as well," Flaherty

"Continuing education is exciting," Lindsey said. "The people working in continuing ed are big dreamers who care a lot about people. Fewer adults are able to stop life to get their education and K-State is aware of that. There is a large sector of the state that we feel responsible for. We are growing tremendously."

On the Long before opening night of "Moon for the Misbegotten," technicians were creating an environment in which the actors can create an illusion of reality.

Each director's, manager's and designer's concentrations come into play as the actors and actresses emerge on stage, complete with makeup and costumes. The lighting and sound are set and dress rehearsals are a thing of the past. But before the glitter and stage-play, came hours of work and rework.

The K-State Players' clothing is designed and sewn by Lydia Aseneta, associate professor of speech and costume designer. Wigs covering styrofoam heads, newspaper clippings, an assortment of jewelry and yards of fabric turn four plain walls into a prop room where Aseneta and her crew work.

"I study the characters and analyze them," Aseneta said. Starting from scratch, she buys fabric for the costumes and makes the appropriate changes from there. Effects such as faded or aged material are achieved by overdying or spray painting, and by greasing the fabric with vaseline it appears to be stained, she said.

Aseneta is also in charge of makeup where she utilizes such products as collodian, latex and artificial blood.

To create a scar, collodian is applied to the skin, making it shrink, and from there red or blue makeup is added, she said. Aging, texture and scabs are the result of using latex, a milky liquid, on the skin.

plaster masks of the actor, she said. On the plaster base a longer nose or different sized ears can be added.

While the characters put on their makeup and ready themselves for rehearsal, Tammy Holbert, graduate in speech and stage manager, oversees the goings-on, checks that the props are in the correct places, paying attention to every detail.

She adds a couple of drops of food coloring to a bottle of water and mixes the two until satisfied that she has created bourbon. The decanter containing the "bourbon" resembles what would have been displayed on a home bar in the 1920s.

"It's important to consider the time period, how much space there is to work with and colors when hunting for play props," Holbert said.

Second-hand stores, rental stores and discount stores are subject to become possible prop outlets for Holbert. Often they are able to borrow items from the stores. "It gets to the point that no matter where you are, you look for props," Holbert said.

"You can't be shy." In the past Holbert has been in charge of duties from dirtying up everything on the set for a "scuzzy" neighborhood effect to writing the White House for an authentic Presidential seal.

"I make sure the job of the director is that much easier," Holbert said.

But without proper lighting, the work behind the props and makeup would be lost.

"The main function is to illuminate the accept," Jeff Childs, senior in speech and scene and light designer, said.

"You could read books 'til you're blue in the face," Childs said, but the way to learn something is to "go in and get your hands on the instruments.

"The key is to never be satisfied until you get what you want," he said. Childs works with "gels" - color plates made of gelatin - to light the characters and suggest different auras. Basically there are three types of lighting that pull the actors and actresses out of the scenery, he said.

Back lights help pull out the body and tonal washes while side lights help define the sides, he said. Sculpturing the face are the front lights.

"A steeper angle in front can cause more shadows in the face and make the actor appear more sinister," Childs said. Or an angle change can give a bit more shadow, he said. "By no means are these the only ways to do

The technical director takes the designer's plans, figures what materials and supplies will be needed and with the crew builds the set, said John Uthoff, associate professor of speech and technical director. "We don't use anything that exotic, it's just the way it's us-

Controversial film debuts in U.S.

NEW YORK - "Hail Mary," the film which was hounded out of Rome by a wrathful pope, made its U.S. debut Monday amid fresh protests by Roman Catholics who cannot envision the Blessed Virgin as a nude starlet.

Cardinal John O'Connor denounced the film as "blasphemous and sacrilegious," and demonstrations were planned at Lincoln Center during Monday evening's premiere at the 23rd New York Film Festival.

"We believe in some sort of decency and decorum in dealing with matters religious. There is obscene language being used, and obscene scenes," said John Puthenveetil, executive director of the Greater New York chapter of the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, which coordinated the protests.

Wonder faces $10 million lawsuit

LOS ANGELES - A $10 million lawsuit has been filed alleging that Stevie Wonder stole the Oscar-winning song "I Just Called to Say I Love You" from a longtime friend and another musician, an attorney said Monday.

Lee Garrett and Lloyd Chiate claim they wrote the song in 1978 while staying with Wonder in a Hollywood hotel, attorney Jack Whitley said at a news conference where he announced the federal suit. Wonder heard rehearsals of the song and was given a taped demonstration copy, Whitley said.

Wonder would not comment on the allegations, said spokesman Charlie Collins.

Welles dies in Hollywood home

LOS ANGELES - Orson Welles, who created the film classic "Citizen Kane" and a radio tale about a Martian invasion that terrified millions of listeners, died Thursday at his home, authorities said. He was 70.

"The cause of death appears to be natural in origin," said Donald Messerle, assistant chief of coroner's investigations.

The portly actor's death was reported to the coroner's office at 11 a.m. by Hollywood Division police, he said.

Welles died in his Hollywood home, but Messerle said the death would not be a coroner's case, because Welles had seen his personal physician within 20 days.

"He was found this morning by his driver at his residence," said police Sgt. Russell Kuster. "We got the call at about 10 a.m.... He'd been suffering from diabetes and a heart ailment, his doctor said. The death is being handled by the doctor because it was of natural

Yul Brynner dies at age 65 from cancer

Lights on marquees and theaters along Broadway were to be dimmed at 8 p.m. Thursday in Brynners's memory.

"He had so many facets as an actor. And of course, he grew in the part of the king. He became the king," said Mary Martin, who recommended Brynner to Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein for the job as the imperious ruler of Brynner shaved his head for the part, and it became his trademark after the show opened on Broadway in 1951.

The role brought him a Tony in 1952, an Oscar in 1957 for the film version, and a special Tony in June which Miss Martin presented. Brynner played his final performance as the monarch June 30 in New York at the end of a national tour that had lasted almost 41/2 years.

Brynner was born Taidje Khan on Sakhalin Island, north of Japan. His father was a Mongolian mining engineer who later changed the family name to Brynner. Brynner's early childhood was spent in Peking but he went to Paris to live with his grandmother and study. He studied philosophy at the Sorbonne and acting with Russian director Michael Chekhov and came to this country in 1941 with Chekhov's acting troupe.

Family and friends held a private service Thursday, and a memorial service will be scheduled later, a spokesperson said. The family has asked that donations be sent to the Yul Brynner Cancer Fund for Children at Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center in New York.

Cast's interpretation of play offers touching moral lesson

By LISA BOOTHE Collegian Reviewer

Calling "Moon for the Misbegotten" a morality play probably would not please the majority of Eugene O'Neill's following. But that's exactly what it is.

Play Keview

The K-State Players' production of O'Neill's final work, which opened Thursday night in McCain Auditorium, was a touching and skillfully delivered lesson in mercy, forgiveness and love. There is an unusual sense of peace by the curtain call, unlike many modern dramas that wouldn't dare stoop to a happy ending. But this ending is different. It is not a quick-fix in its complications, but it is happy because the audience believes the characters did everything they could to ease the other's burdens, whether or not they grew to be truly "moral."

The play opens on a shanty farm in rural Connecticut in 1923 with Josie

Hogan, played by Marcia Sullivan, shooing off her last brother, played by Brad Atchison, so he can become somebody other than a slave to their drunken, Irish rapscallion of a father, played by Timothy Smith.

Josie and her father, along with their landlord, played by Craig Stout, then become the tryad of equally strong characters who pull each other in different directions until they come to a sort of reconciliation.

Craig Stout is at his best ever as the guilt-ridden James Tyrone, Jr. He actually seems carried by the strength of his character's lines and is virtually unaware of the audience. He is vulnerable yet never selfconscious

An equally powerful performance by Sullivan is most evident in the final scenes when Josie must hold the weight of the drama herself - internally at that. As the mother-figure to every other character, she must prove her strength along with her womanhood, and by the play's conclusion, Josie has our unwavering admiration regardless of her actions.

Finally, Smith is the real highlight whether he is carrying on with his crooked antics, throwing a pity party or being surprisingly sensitive.

All the performers, in fact, are evidently well-rehearsed and wellmotivated, for they keep strictly in character (other than forgetting from time to time that they have Irish accents). Director Charlotte MacFarland has done a conscientious job of keeping the physical action attuned to the mood and pace of the dialogue.

Particularly appealing is the effective use of lighting to depict a very important sunrise.

On the night before the characters' atonement, the moon becomes the motif for passions past, present and future. Obviously there can be no moon in the auditorium, but several times the lighting caused audience members to look up and around for it. Then at dusk, the outline of the shanty's roof became a silhouetted horizon. It was subtle and serene and well-suited to the final scene where morning is finally, eternally broken.

Cowboys to defeat NU in close battle

The Big Eight Conference football season begins in earnest this weekend with three games on tap, including a matchup between the fifthranked Cowboys of Oklahoma State University (4-0) and the ninthranked Cornhuskers of the University of Nebraska (3-1).

K-State and the University of Oklahoma opened the conference season last Saturday, but Saturday's games will really get the ball rolling. With K-State idle this weekend, sports fans can look forward to a weekend in front of the television watching exciting Big Eight football.

The Nebraska - Oklahoma State game will be nationally televised by ESPN beginning at 6:45 p.m. and the game between the University of Kansas and Iowa State University will be broadcast by Raycom as the Big Eight Game-of-the-Week at 11:40 a.m.

Both games will be exciting. Nebraska and Oklahoma State have national rankings on the line, and the Kansas attack features Heisman Trophy candidate Mike Norseth, one of the most exciting passing quarterbacks the conference has seen in recent years.

Because the Nebraska-Oklahoma State game is such an important one on a national scale, I'd like to take a look at the two teams I'll be watching Saturday evening.

Nebraska's offensive attack, which currently ranks first in the nation in total offense, is built around another Heisman candidate, Doug DuBose. DuBose did not play in last week's 38-7 Nebraska win over the University of New Mexico because of a bruised knee, but has still compiled some impressive three-game statistics.

DuBose has carried the ball 55 times for 347 yards, an average of 6.3 yards per carry. He rushed for 191 yards in Nebraska's 52-25 win over the University of Illinois in late September.

As impressive as DuBose is, senior I-back Paul Miles has been even more impressive at times. While DuBose sat on the bench, Miles got his first career start and responded with a personal best 189 yards on 25 carries. Miles averages an incredible 7.8 yards per carry.

Nebraska's defense is no weak sister, either.

The Huskers rank 17th in the nation in total defense and defensive linemen Jim Skow, Danny Noonan and Tony Holloway have combined for 12 sacks this year.

Holloway was the Big Eight Defensive Player-of-the-Week last week and Skow ranks second in the conference in quarterback sacks behind K-State defensive end Kevin Hum-

Defense is a Cowboy strong point as well. Oklahoma State ranks 10th in the nation in total defense and is led by lineman Leslie O'Neal and linebacker Ricky Adams.

O'Neal, the Big Eight's Defensive Player-of-the-Week for the last weekend in September, ranks third in the conference in quarterback sacks and second in the conference in total tackles made by a lineman.

Adams ranks fourth in the conference in tackles by a linebacker with 51. Before coming to OSU, Adams was a junior college All-American for two years at Hutchinson Community College.

The Cowboy offense is led by yet another Heisman candidate, tailback Thurman Thomas. Thomas was the Big Eight Newcomer-of-the-Year in 1984 and closed out his impressive freshman campaign by winning the MVP award in Oklahoma State's 21-14 win over South Carolina in the Gator Bowl.

K-State fans undoubtedly remember Thomas. He gained 204 yards on 34 carries against the 'Cats last season, marking the only time in 1984 a Big Eight back exceeded the 200-yard mark in a single game. The Cowboys routed K-State 34-6.

It will be a treat to watch two teams as good as Nebraska and Oklahoma State battle it out, and I look for the game to be a close one. Who am I picking? I like the

'Puff' National team pulls out 14-12 win

By TONY CARBAJO Collegian Reporter

The National sorority all-stars scored on a 60-yard pass and pitch play with only two plays left to win the Tau Kappa Epsilon Powder Puff All-Star Classic football game 14-12 Thursday night at Griffith Field.

Alice Barnett, a member of Kappa Alpha Theta, took a pitchout from a teammate after a 20-yard pass and ran the remaining 40 yards to give the National team, coached by Clark Renfro and Dallas Auch, TKE members, the come-from-behind victory.

After a scoreless first quarter on a cold, drizzly night with the temperature in the mid 40s, the National all-stars moved the ball from the midfield marker to the end zone in four plays.

Barnett shed off three American players after catching a short pass over the middle from Theta quarterback Sherri Caster to put the National team on the board. The two-point conversion pass to Kayla Taylor of Pi Beta Phi was good and the Nationals led 8-0.

The American team struck back quickly as quarterback Kathy Sheehan of Gamma Phi Beta hit Kappa Kappa Gamma's Trisha Thompson on a rollout pass covering 20 yards. The twopoint conversion pass attempt was batted down by Jenny Wilson of Delta Delta, one of the defensive stars for the NL team. For the game, Wilson had a sack, an interception and two broken up

The American team kept the momentum going in the second half and drove to the National's 2-yard line on their second possession. Slotback Connie Welch of Sigma Sigma Sigma took the snap and ran up the middle for the TD to give the Americans their only lead of the game at 12-8. The extra point failed again.

K-State to play Shockers, Tulsa

By CLAUDIA SANGSTER Collegian Reporter

K-State's volleyball team suffered its second Big Eight defeat of the conference season, falling to the University of Missouri Tigers 15-9, 0-15, 15-10, 13-15 and 15-2 Wednesday night in Columbia, Mo.

The Wildcats were led by Donna Lee, one of K-State's senior cocaptains, connecting on 20 of 44 attacks, with just five errors. Her attacking percentage was 34 percent.

Sophomore Mary Kinsey also attacked well for K-State. She was successful on 11 of 34 attacks, with two errors, for an attacking percentage of 26 percent.

Lee led all performers in the dig category. She had 11 for the match.

K-State played without the leading blocker in the conference, Helen Bundy. She suffered an ankle injury in the last five minutes of practice Tuesday. Freshman Shawnee Call played against Missouri, but also suffered an ankle injury in Tuesday's practice. She was questionable up until game time Wednesday.

"The match with Missouri was a swing of momentum," Head Coach Scott Nelson said. "It was a good match and real closely contested. Missouri had the momentum at the start of the fifth game and that carried them through the game."

Again the Wildcats were forced to go five games against a Big Eight opponent, something K-State hasn't done for a few years.

"Each Big Eight match that we have played has gone five games," Nelson said. "The last time I remember us going five games with Missouri was at least three years

Despite the loss to Missouri, Nelson is finding positive things coming out of the Big Eight play.

"We rely a lot on our youth. Against MU we made our adjustments well and a lot of positive things are happening," Nelson said. "Our win-loss record may not show it, but there are a lot of positive things happening with our team."

Going into the match against Missouri, the Wildcats stood in third place. Nebraska is leading the conference with a 3-0 mark, followed by Missouri at 2-0.

Today the Wildcats will be in action at the Wichita State University Tournament. They will be playing the host Shockers at 3:30 p.m., followed by Tulsa University at 7:30. The University of Kansas will be present at the tournament, but K-State will not face them in competition.

Nelson plans to use the nonconference competition today as a time to work on needed areas of the Wildcat game.

'There are certain areas we need to improve on," he said. "Offensively we need to make some adjustments and work on some of our plays."

The match against Wichita State is an important one for Nelson, because it is an intra-state rival.

"The first time we played them, we beat them in three games, but they were competitive games,' Nelson said. "This time we will be at their place and the tension of playing us the first time is gone. They have made improvements and gained confidence in the last month."

Saberhagen seeks 1st win in postseason

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Bret Saberhagen, an expectant father for the first time, is now the person the Kansas City Royals hope will deliver them from their postseason lethargy and back into the American League playoffs.

The Royals lost the first two games of the best-of-seven series to the Toronto Blue Jays.

"We've shown the ability to play a bad series or a bad week and then bounce back," Royals Manager Dick Howser said during Thursday's offday. "That's what I'm counting on now."

Toronto won the first two games at home, and the series resumes tonight at Royals Stadium with Game 3.

The Royals have lost their last 10 postseason appearances dating back to the fourth game of the 1980 World Series, and Howser has lost 11 straight.

"If we're going to get this thing started in the right direction, now's the time," Howser said. "He's been our No. 1 pitcher on our staff."

Saberhagen, 20-6 during the season, started last Saturday night's game when the Royals clinched the AL West crown, which delayed his debut in the playoffs.

The 21-year-old right-hander said he realizes the pressure the Royals are under, and says he'll try to not worry about it.

"You don't want to think about what happens if you're down 0-3," he said, "but it's in the back of your mind. Not too many people have come back from that."

One thought on his mind is the imminent arrival of his and his wife Janeane's first child.

"I think it's been helping me this season," he said. "It gives me something to else to look forward to when I get home. It gives us something else to talk about besides baseball.

Saberhagen has faced Toronto only once this season, in mid-April when the Blue Jays knocked him out in the third inning after giving up four runs on six hits.

That was about the last time Saberhagen was in trouble this season.

"It seemed like right after that game I turned things around," he said. "I wasn't spotting my fastball well and was having some problems.'

Recalled Toronto Manager Bobby Cox: "We got a couple of runs off him, but not too many people have scored off him since then.'

Cox will send 35-year-old Doyle Alexander (17-10 this season) against Saberhagen when the league's first all-artificial turf series resumes.

Alexander could possibly face a revamped Kansas City lineup. Howser said he had thought about making some changes, but said he did not want to announce anything definite until tonight's game.

scored three times. Bill Madlock added three singles, two of which drove in runs, to the Dodgers' 13-hit attack. Hershiser, 19-3 with 11 consecutive victories to close the season, allowed eight hits and gave up only one St. Louis run until the ninth. He also drove in the Dodgers' first run to igthe fourth inning off Joaquin Andu-jar, and Ken Landreaux doubled twice and singled, drove in a run and nite a three-run third inning.

Hershiser walked five, struck out four, and got into his groove after muddling through some early-inning problems. At one point in the late innings, he retired eight in a row and allowed three hits in the final five innings, including two in the ninth when the Cardinals scored their se-

MCC calls for meeting on finances

By The Collegian Staff

In an attempt to find new sources of income to overcome its financial difficulties, officials of the Manhattan Christian College have called a public meeting for 7:30 p.m. Monday at the Coffin Memorial Campus Center.

The meeting has been called to announce a new program, Charitable Limited Partnerships, that is being established to help the school eliminate up to $900,000 of its current debt, while at the same time giving the school's financial backers a higher return on investments

The program is designed to allow investors in MCC a higher rate of return than regular commercial rates.

An example given by the school was that a return on a five-year investment in the proposed plan could be as high as 33 percent before taxes.

The new fund would allow the college to pass property depreciation write-offs to investors, which is generally not permitted for non-profit organizations, which will allow the larger return for investors.

Monday also marks the 6:30 p.m. groundbreaking of land for construction of a new administrative-classroom facility, gifted to the college by two donors. The facility will contain all administrative and faculty offices and classroom space for up to 545 students.

Persons interested should contact Gary Edwards, MCC vice president for development, or Allen Ellas, director of planned giving at the school.

Scholars' discussion focuses on linguistics

By The Collegian Staff

The 20th Annual Mid-American Linguistics Conference, in which scholars from midwestern universities will read and discuss papers by professionals in various fields, will be held in the Union today and Saturday.

Papers to be discussed were written by professionals in the fields of foreign languages, English, psychology and other areas of study, said James Armagost, associate professor of speech. Some of the papers are written on a variety of topics dealing with the use of language or the history of language.

The individual sessions will begin at 9:30 a.m. today and will last until 8 p.m. Saturday's session will begin at 9 a.m. and last until 3 p.m. The featured speaker is Ronald W. Langacker from the University of California at San Diego. He will lecture on "A View of Linguistic Semantics."

Sessions of 30-minutes have been allotted for the author of each paper to deliver a lecturestyle presentation. Several papers are also being written and read by graduate students in

Some papers are written strictly for the professional educator, while others are of a more general nature and would be of interest to the community, Armagost said.

"A couple of sessions that might really interest the community are, 'Is the Lord's Prayer a Good Example of Old English Word Order?' by Alvin L. Gregg, (from) Wichita State (University), and 'Language Learning and Studying: An Important Distinction for Language Teachers' by Donald N. Larson, Bethel College," Armagost said.

There is no formal organization for the linguistic conference. The planning for the conference was done by a four-member committee. The committee consists of Jan Bediosian, assistant professor of speech; Enid Cocke, a temporary instructor for English; Richard Harris, professor of psychology; and Armagost.

The committee decided that the University would be an excellent place to have the conference because it is in a central location.

He said the expected turnout for the conference is between 50 and 70 educators.

Student Government, K-State Administration, Aggieville merchants and Manhattan High School.

Other appointed representatives come from the Manhattan Park and Recreation Advisory Board, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Manhattan City Commission and citizens-at-

Doug Chamblin, K-State Student Government representative to the board and the only K-State student serving on the board, said recent changes in the by-laws will allow the appointment of two more K-State students on the board, with one from the K-State Greek Council and the second to be a representative of offcampus students at the University.

Chamblin, who was nominated for the position by Steve Brown, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and student body president, said he has a feeling of student concerns.

"Students have brought issues to me a lot and I try to make myself more visible to enable that more," he said. "Other student issues I take to the board are concerns I get from the Student Senate meetings.

"Mainly the board wants some student-level input," he said.

City Commissioner Rick Mann, the commission's representative to the board, said the five new appointees would be made in the near future.

Among the purposes of the board are to provide direction for the commission on city issues affecting students and to request the board interact with local residents to receive input on issues related to students.

Other purposes include "effective communication" concerning existing rules, policies, ordinances and laws; implementation of new rules. policies, ordinances and laws; and for preparation in events expected to attract large numbers of people to the Manhattan community.

Apartheid is South Africa's institutionalized racial separation, by which 5 million whites dominate 24 million blacks.

Paul Kruger was the forceful president of the South African Republic from 1883 to 1902, which came to an end with Britain's victory over the Afrikaners in the Boer War. The war instilled a deep nationalism among white Afrikaners that still inspires the nation's rulers.

New cigarette ads, labels hit market

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - New and specific health warnings are appearing on cigarette packages and advertising, a change medical experts hope will help persuade Americans to quit - or never start - smoking.

"The public needs to know the danger, since this is the single most preventable source of heart disease, cancer and lung disease. I think that freedom of choice...demands that this be an informed choice," said Dr. John A. Oates, chairman of the department of medicine at Vanderbilt University.

The new system of rotating label warnings becomes official Saturday. although the labels already have begun to appear in some areas. Unlike the old warning on every pack and every cigarette advertisement that cigarette smoking is dangerous to health, the new labels state specific dangers, including cancer, heart and lung disease and hazards to pregnant women and their babies.

"Most people understand about cancer and heart disease. If you have lung disease it's pretty obvious you shouldn't be smoking," said Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, "but one of or big health problems is low birth weight babies, and this is something that can turn that around."

The tobacco industry, which regards the diseases which befall its customers as a statistical coincidence, has not been enthusiastic about the new labels.

A series of four different warnings is coming into use, to be rotated quarterly under a plan developed by cigarette makers and the Federal Trade Commission.

The new warnings are:

Surgeon General's Warning: Smoking Causes Lung Cancer, Heart Disease, Emphysema, and May Complicate Pregnancy

Surgeon General's Warning: Quitting Smoking Now Greatly Reduces Serious Risks to Your Health.

 Surgeon General's Warning: Cigarette Smoke Contains Carbon Monoxide.

Surgeon General's Warning: Smoking by Pregnant Women May Result in Fetal Injury, Premature Birth and Low Birth Weight.

Americans bought 584.4 billion cigarettes in 1983, the most recent year for which complete statistics are available, according to the Federal Trade Commission.

Union activities can be alternative to Aggieville bar scene

By DONNA COPE Collegian Reporter

Aggieville is not the only alternative for students when planning social activities. The Union offers a wide variety of recreational activities and programs at little or no

The Union Recreation Center offers bowling, billiards, table tennis, video and pinball machines, checkers, chess, backgammon, playing cards and Trivial Pursuit.

Terri Eddy, Union Recreation Manager, said bowling is a favorite among students. The cost of bowling at the Union is 70 cents a game Monday through Thursday. The price is 90 cents a game evenings, Fridays and weekends. The cost includes shoe and ball rental.

"The cost is still quite a bit under that of the commercial bowling alleys," Eddy said.

Bowling leagues are offered at the Union Sunday through Thursday. About 500 people are currently involved in 18 different leagues competing this fall. Eddy said some leagues are offered exclusively to students. There are also leagues that are strictly for faculty and staff pool leagues. Each team consists of two members and competes for a trophy. About 30 people participate in a fall pool league on either Monday or Wednesday night.

The Union also offers competitive

Games are available at the desk in the Union Recreation Center. Cards, checkers and chess can be borrowed at no charge with a student I.D. Trivial Pursuit can be rented for $1 if it is not taken from the Union premises, rent increases to $2 if the game is taken from the building. A $10 deposit fee is required to cover the cost of the game.

Other extra- and co-curricular activities in the Union are provided by committees of the Union Program

Those committees include Arts, Eclectic Entertainment, Kaleidoscope Films, Feature Films, Special Events and Issues and Ideas. The committees, which are supported by four professional staff members, consist of student volunteers.

Meredith Radke, junior in art education, is a member of the UPC Arts Committee. She said the group is involved with coordinating the selection of artists for gallery displays. Students can view the displays each week for free.

tee, formerly UPC Coffeehouse. Jeff Miller, senior in electrical engineering and Eclectic Entertainment chairman, said the group is placing increasing emphasis on the shows it brings to campus instead of the Nooners which are decreasing in popularity. Recently, the committee brought comedian Tim Cavenaugh to the Catskeller. On October 24, Eclectic Entertainment will host a dinner showcase featuring John Bayley, a Reggae musician.

Amy Berkley, senior in prephysical therapy and a member of Kaleidoscope Films Committee, said this group has been working since last spring to select the movies it will show in the Union this semester.

"We try to bring in the diverse and lesser-known films," she said. "We bring in quite a few foreign films."

The UPC Feature Films Committee brings the more recent box office hits to the campus, program adviser Marilyn Woodward said.

The two film committees try and work together and co-sponsor events. Woodward said the group hopes to appeal to the widest variety of film tastes.

The UPC films are offered to the students for $1.75 with a student I.D. card. Saturday and Sunday matinees are shown for $1.50.

"I like being able to see fairly current movies at such a low cost," said Glenn Wells, senior in marketing.

The Special Events Committee promotes programs such as the Activities Carnival and The Welcome Back Concert, held each fall. The committee will present the band, '1964,'' October 20, playing songs from the Beatle's era.

"The band members will look, act and sing like the Beatles," said Janice Kiser, program adviser.

The Issues and Ideas Committee brings current issues to the campus. Last year the group sponsored a lecture on campus by former independent presidential candidate John Anderson, Woodward said.

African guerrillas, opposition leaders request racial unity

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - White opposition legislators and exiled black guerrilla leader said Sunday they agreed on "the urgent need to dismantle apartheid and establish a united, non-racial, democratic South Africa."

But they said they disagreed on how to do it.

In Pretoria, the capital, national police headquarters said three black men were killed and 12 people were injured Saturday night and Sunday in more than 15 incidents of arson, stone-throwing and the tossing of a hand grenade.

Police made five arrests during the violent protests against apartheid, the nation's policy of enforced racial segregation under which 5 million whites deny the vote to 24 million blacks.

In Zwelintaba, near Worcester in Cape Province, a crowd of blacks attacked a home and burned to death a black man who tried to flee, according to police. They said police fired on the crowd, killing one man.

Police earlier said they found the charred body of a black man at Duncan Village, near the Indian Ocean port of East London. More than 750 people, nearly all blacks, have been killed by police and other blacks in 13 months of racial violence.

A joint statement issued by leaders of the opposition Progressive Federal Party and executives of the outlawed African National Congress described a "friendly and cordial atmosphere" in nine hours of talks in Lusaka, Zambia.

The statement reported differences of opinion on the roles of armed struggle and negotiation in bringing about change.

The ANC has said it plans to step up a campaign of violence to undermine white-minority rule. The Progressive Federal Party opposes the use of force. The PFP is seeking to arrange a national convention on South Africa's future, but the statement said the ANC did not see "at the present moment a climate under which the ANC could consider a negotiated resolution of the crisis."

The meeting was the second attempt in a month by whites outside the government to directly involve the ANC, which says it has the support of most of South Africa's blacks. in talks on the country's prolonged

Three top white businessmen traveled to Zambia in September for a one-day meeting with ANC leaders. They said later they foresaw the possibility of more talks.

The Progressive Federal Party-ANC statement was issued in Lusaka, where the talks were held Saturday. Party leader Frederik van Zyl Slabbert and ANC Secretary-General Alfred Nzo answered questions during a joint news conference.

In Pretoria, South Africa's capital, national police headquarters said one black man was killed and 12 people were injured in 15 incidents of arson and stone-throwing and a hand grenade throwing Saturday night and early Sunday.

U.S. demands arrest of hijack mastermind

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Indignant about Italy's "incomprehensible" release of a Palestinian accused of masterminding the Achille Lauro hijacking, the Reagan administration demanded his arrest Sunday in Yugoslavia, where officials indicated they would not cooperate.

FBI Director William Webster said Yugoslavian authorities "have declined to detain" Mohammad Abu el Abbas, an associate of Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat, who was taken into custody along with the four men accused of hijacking the Italian cruise ship and killing one American.

Abbas, whom a U.S. official said was spirited out of Italy disguised as an Egyptian sailor, flew Saturday night to Yugoslavia, where American diplomats immediately requested that he be held for extradi-

"I would anticipate that he will probably move along," Webster said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

State Department legal adviser Abraham Sofaer, however, said that there still was a chance Abbas could be arrested, though only a slim one.

"They may have at this point refused to detain him," Sofaer said, "but they have not turned down our request for provisional arrest."

But a government official, speaking later in the day on condition of anonymity, said Yugoslavian authorities in Belgrade indicated during informal conversations with U.S. diplomats that they consider Abbas to have diplomatic immunity and therefore wouldn't detain him. The official stressed, however, that

Through its own developments, the Department of Engineering Technology is keeping up with state of the art technology. The electronic design lab in engineering technology is designing a new computer for laboratory classroom use to replace the microprocessor the class currently

The microprocessor is still used, but is becoming obsolete because faster, more capable computers are being built.

By designing the computer, "we can make sure it does what we want, and we can save a lot of money,' said David Delker, assistant professor of engineering technology. Three companies are interested in marketing the computer to univer-

The unit the class is constructing will cost approximately $100, while a comparable unit could cost $400 to $500, he said. The class will initially build 15 units.

Through classroom application, students will learn microprocessor programming and computer interphasing techniques.

This fall students are working on a board containing computer circuitry. Next semester's class will design a keyboard and display terminal which hooks up to the board.

To make the circuit board, the students compose the design on a computer screen, then send it to the computer's plotter where it is reproduced. The fabrication lab photographically reduces the drawing to a negative and exposes the image onto a fiberglass plate with copper foil on both sides.

An acid solution removes the unexposed copper and leaves the design. Afterward, the fabrication lab solders the components into the board and returns it to the design group for testing.

Old circuit boards, which used wires to connect each pin instead of the copper tracings, looked like "a mass of spaghetti," Delker said. "To

Architectural exhibit captures lifestyle of Mediterranean

By SUE DAWSON Staff Writer

The lifestyle and architecture of Greece, Italy, Spain and Yugoslavia have been brought to Manhattan through the talents of Cathi and Steven House, architects from San Francisco.

"Mediterranean Indigenous Architecture," an exhibit containing drawings, photographs and paintings by Cathi and Steven House, was sponsored by the Manhattan Arts Council, the Holiday Inn and Holidome, and the Union National Bank

The exhibit will be displayed through Nov. 13 in the Union National Bank lobby, 727 Poyntz Ave.

The Houses are partners in the San Francisco-based architectural and graphic design firm of House and House. They have also worked in Virginia, Philadelphia and have traveled extensively throughout Europe. Both are graduates of Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

The exhibit represents work created by the Houses during three eight-to nine-month European trips from 1975 to 1982.

"It all happened by accident," Cathi House, 32, said. The pair went to Greece in 1975 to avoid "looking at the (European architecture) that you learned in history class," she said. "What we saw (in Greece) was what is 'real' architecture to us."

She said at first they collected their photographs and drawings haphazardly, until they were urged by friends to create an exhibit. They returned to the Mediterranean to gather up the last pieces of information needed to complete the show.

"The first thing we learned to say in each language was, 'Hello, we are architects.

May we come in and sketch your house?" Cathi House said.

"We also thought that it was important to stay in the houses," Steven House said. He said they did not stay in hotels, but rented vacant houses or stayed with families. The exhibit is grouped together by cities and towns the Houses visited in the Mediter-

"Each town had one particular focus that made it unique," Steven House, 33, said. He added that the panels were created to display the most interesting aspects of the various communities.

Steven House said the purpose of the exhibit is for people to use what they see in the world in order to create a better living environment. The Houses said all the drawings were done at the actual site, but it took six months to put all the photographs and drawings

MUNICH, West Germany - Riot police fired tear gas and clashed with protesters following a demonstration by 27,000 people against a planned nuclear-waste processing plant in the Munich area, authorities said Sunday.

Police said 155 protesters were arrested during a march that began Saturday and lasted into early Sunday.

More than 100 of those arrested were held in investigative custody Sunday and may face charges, according to police.

The demonstrators carried banners reading "Against the Atomic State" and "Stop the March Toward Atomic Death."

Police locate inmates' stolen truck

LAWRENCE - A truck believed stolen by two escapees from the Kansas State Penitentiary was found abandoned in Douglas County,

The area around where the truck was found was searched, but there was no sign of the two inmates, who were discovered missing early Friday.

A spokeswoman for the Douglas County sheriff's department declined Sunday to say where or when the truck was found.

The truck was stolen Saturday after three men were tied and gagged in a house in Tonganoxie. The three men were not injured by the inmates, although one man cut his hand after freeing himself, said Leavenworth County Sheriff's Department spokesman Burdel Welsh. The men were tied up for about five hours.

Authorities declined to release the names of the three men. Welsh said the inmates also took two large knives, clothing and about $280 in cash from the residence, just south of Tonganoxie. They left behind their prison clothing, he said.

The inmates were identified as Rickie Cagle, 35, who was serving a three-to five-year term from Shawnee County for illegal possession of firearms, and Randy L. Mahlandt, 26, who was serving a life prison term from Sedgwick County for aggravated kidnapping, robbery, rape and aggravated sodomy.

The inmates were discovered missing after a house about two blocks from the Lansing prison was broken into.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. - A youth who was forced out of the Boy Scouts of America after he said he did not believe in God has been readmitted, and Scout officials have agreed to drop the definition of God as the supreme being.

Paul Trout, 15, of Shepherdstown, W.Va., was reinstated Thursday after meeting at his boarding school near here with an official from the Boy Scouts' national headquarters in Irving, Texas.

At a meeting in Texas that day, the organization decided to remove language from its literature that defines God as the supreme being and to instruct local troops not to question boys on their specific religious beliefs, said Boy Scout spokesman Raul Chavez.

The national executive board also passed a resolution reaffirming the Boy Scout Oath, which requires duty to God, Chavez said.

Trout, who had been forced out of scouting in April, was granted a promotion to Life Scout. The rank, scouting's second highest, had been denied him at the instruction of national Boy Scout officials after he told his local review board that although he respected the religious beliefs of others, he did not believe in God or a supreme be-

Survey shows illegal gun purchases

WASHINGTON - Only about one in five convicted felons surveyed by the government said they obtained their guns through legitimate channels such as retail stores, the Justice Department said Sunday. A survey of 1,874 imprisoned felons in 11 institutions found that criminals much more frequently steal their guns or get them from relatives or friends, the department's National Institute of Justice said.

The findings were cited by a spokesman for the National Rifle Association as further evidence against the effectiveness of stringent gun registration and licensing controls.

A spokesman for the National Coalition to Ban Handguns said he had no quarrel with the study's conclusion, but that his organization insists handguns must be outlawed.

"More predatory criminals, acquiring a handgun specifically for use in crime, heavily exploited informal, off-the-record means and sources and rarely went through customary retail channels," said the 49-page, $397,000 study conducted by James D. # Deficit plan may require defense cuts

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III said Sunday an administration-backed deficit reduction plan now before Congress could work without tax increases but may require cutbacks in defense spending plans.

House and Senate negotiators plan to begin work this week on a Senatepassed plan to gradually cut deficits to zero by fiscal 1991. It was approved overwhelmingly in the Senate last week, and the House endorsed the idea, but even the plan's supporters questioned whether the plan can stop the flood of government red ink.

Baker said he thought it could. "I think, given the political will to make the hard choices, you can reach balance without having to raise taxes," Baker said on NBC-TV's Meet the Press. "Clearly, there would have to be reductions in defense.

"One of the first things I think we'd do is to phase revenue sharing out this year instead of next," as the administration proposed, but Congress rejected. "We would kill Amtrak. We can't afford to maintain Amtrak," he

> — James A. Baker III U.S. Treasury Secretary

The Republican-led Senate last week approved setting deficit targets and requiring spending cuts to be carried out by the president if Congress and the president failed to meet those goals. However, Social Security, interest on the national debt, and prior government contracts were exempted from the cuts, so only about half the federal budget would be touched. President Reagan has said his "personal caveat" was also to exempt defense spending from the plan. He said Congress had a commitment to its budget plan for keeping defense increases current with inflation this fiscal year, and increasing it 3 percent above inflation the next two fiscal years.

That position contrasted with statements by the deficit plan's sponsors, Sens. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, Warren Rudman, R-N.H., and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., who said the cuts must be across-the-board for it to be successful.

"But I think the president must have taken that into consideration when he embraced the proposal. Deficit reduction is extremely important," Baker said

The automatic spending cuts in the plan would take effect only after Congress' normal budget process has failed to meet the deficit targets. To reach the goals, spending could be cut or taxes could be raised, or both.

The House Friday overwhelmingly approved a resolution supporting the goal of a rigid timetable for deficit reduction. But even supporters were

"It is a statute that could be waived by the Congress of the United States just like it waives the Budget Act now," said Rep. Delbert Latta, House Democrats have criticized the plan's timetable. House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said it was altered to avoid serious cutbacks until after the 1986 election, which is crucial to the GOP's hopes of retaining control of the Senate.

There will be plenty of pressure on the conference committee to work quickly because the plan was attached by the Senate to a bill raising the national debt above $2 trillion.

The Treasury has used up its current borrowing limit of $1.824 trillion and resorted last week to complicated accounting procedures to keep government checks from bouncing. Although the procedures raised $5 billion and another $10 billion could be available, the coffers could run dry again before month's end.

Housing rate hike unfair

its lowest rate ever.

The Department of Housing announced the statistics Thursday, although many on campus already knew it. At 87 percent occupancy, housing is faced with decisions about closing some floors or even entire halls.

What everyone on campus didn't know was that housing is once again discussing raising the rates to stay in residence halls.

Simple rules of supply and demand discredit the reasoning behind consideration of raising housing fees. When demand is down, producers lower prices to attract consumers.

More and more students are finding it more economical to live off campus, if not in terms of finances, then because of privacy and convenience.

Statistically, the housing department can probably prove it is cheaper to live in the residence hall, although no matter what statistics they choose to quote, the gap is narrowing.

However, the fact that residence halls may be cheaper is not the point. The point is, halls are no longer cheap enough to keep residents from moving off campus where they can make their own rules.

The housing department has also made the mistake of not requiring freshmen to live in residence halls. The residence

Residence hall occupancy is at hall system provides not only a controlled atmosphere for new students, but also a social atmosphere where freshmen can meet friends and adapt to University life. Not requiring freshmen to live in residence halls makes even less sense when housing cannot fill the halls.

> The housing department should examine the quality of residence hall life before raising rates. Are residents getting what they are paying for? Do the halls provide a clean, quiet, personal living arrangement? Is the food good enough to make up for the advantage of not having to cook?

> It would be only fair to give the housing department credit for some improvements it is making in the residence hall system. For example, the RESPECT program in Putnam Hall and on some floors in other halls provides quiet living environments for older or more serious students. The RESPECT program will make the possibility of living in a residence hall for four years more attractive to

Takin' it to the streets with Rappin' Rich

The rappin' fad has faded, but since the new "Miami Vice" soundtrack saw fit to lay some rap on "Vice" watchers, I figured I'd give it a try.

There is a purpose to the following rap: There is more going on in Manhattan, on campus and in the world than we have time to think about, much less do anything about. But these things need to be recognized too, and the fact that they are brought to your attention might spur you to do something, rather than throwing up your hands because "it's all too much too handle."

Please be generous as you rap with Rich. I don't think I quite managed to capture the essence of the thing...but then I'm an Englishman, so go figure.

My name is Rich And I'm here today To rap with you The newspaper way.

Let's talk about What's goin' down On the campus streets In Manhattan town.

Coliseum -What a mess All those bucks For an "expert" guess.

The mall -Council's pushin' For a real big deal All the folks Gettin' screwed for real.

Raise my bills, Raise my rent. If I go broke, You won't get a cent.

RICH HARRIS Collegian Columnist

Asbestos -Causin' lots o' fright. Would Phil Collins feel it In the Air Tonight?

It's testin' time For the GTAs If they know a rap Do they get a raise?

South Africa -What an ugly scene You really can't blame 'em For gettin' mean.

What's on the tube? Not a lot for you If you've got more Than a low I.Q.

LiveAid -A major act Helped a lot of folks And that's a fact.

Acker -Gonna say so long. Hope the committee Don't take too long.

A lot of dough Who's really gonna decide To whom it oughta go?

It's classes. And meetings And Aggieville. It's deadlines And headlines, The college thrill. Four or five years Of havin' fun Then out in the world Where you're under the gun.

It makes me wonder What it's all about So many folks Just dyin' to get out You'd think they'd wanna Hang around some more -Out in the real world It's a major bore.

If you think my rap Smells like old gym socks Then I guess you oughta Catch "Jam the Box."

That's it, folks. Not great, but I think if advertising doesn't work out for me, I'm going to try the music business

On the other hand, maybe I should stick to more conventional methods of communicating...like smoke signals.

I hope my rap debut has given you pause for consideration. If it amused, I am gratified - but let's not leave it at that. That ought to wrap it up.

Bicycle safety necessary

While bicycle helmets are not attractive to wear, there is overwhelming proof that they do save lives and help lessen injuries to the head.

Like seatbelts, many people onon a trip. If cyclists are just cruising around town or messing around in their backyard, they don't wear helmets.

Accidents are as close as walking out the front door.

One recent serious cycling accident to a student, Michael Newton, graduate in physics, caused his death. Friends of Newton say they are sure he would be alive today if he had worn a helmet, although they admit before Newton's tragic death they may have not worn their helmets just for a jaunt around Newton's accident was not the only serious biking accident in Manhattan, but it is the only fatal one. Newton's friends say they are "adamant" about wearing helmets, and now refuse to ride with anyone who doesn't.

Friends of Newton's say if anything positive is to come out of Newton's misfortune it should be to convice other bikers to wear

The streets are dangerous for ly wear cycle helmets if they go bikers. The odds of a 200-pound cyclist coming out unscathed in a meeting with a 2,000-pound car are not in the cyclist's favor. Twenty dollars spent on a bicycle helmet could save a life.

But helmets collecting dust in the closet aren't any help if the cyclist goes down.

There is a misconception floating around that Newton's accident was a freak accident something that doesn't happen often. But bike accidents of varying severity happen every day.

If you were to take a spill on your bike and were wearing a helmet, it would be a very comforting feeling to get up and bandage your elbow.

If you weren't wearing a helmet, you may never open your eyes again.

Reagan should say 'no' to Israeli acts of terrorism

On Tuesday, Oct. 1, Israeli warplanes bombed Palestinian Liberation Organization headquarters in a Tunis suburb and more than 60 people were killed (about 20 Tunisians and 40 Palestinians) and 200 were in-

These barbaric attacks on Arabic countries are not going to stop at the present time. Israel invaded South Lebanon in 1982, and it is responsible for hundreds of Palestinians massacred at Sabra and Shatilla camps in 1982. In 1981, Israeli warplanes bombed an Iraqi nuclear reactor near Baghdad. Israel is still keeping some of the Arabic lands including West Bank and Gaza strip from previous Israeli-Arabic wars.

The Reagan administration considered the raid on Tunis, which is 1,500 miles away from Israel, an act of self-defense. It is an irony!

But when one American is kidnapped or killed, it is terrorism - with my consideration to Americans and my regret to what happened to William Buckley. For me and all Arabs, including Palestinians on this campus, we are not supporting any of these attacks on Americans.

What I am saying is if you (Americans) have the right to live, Palestinians have the right to live, too. If you believe in that, make others - including President Reagan - say "No" to Israel and to respect other people's human rights.

Americans should respect Palestinian human rights

Israeli jets recently travelled 1,500 miles to bomb Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters in Tunisia. Both Palestinians and Tunisians were killed. Had any other country done the same thing - namely carrying out air raids against a country with which they were not at war - it would have been considered an act of war and would have been strongly condemned by the United

But because it was Israel who did it, it seems like the United States is looking through its fingers concerning this air raid. Is Israel without guilt no matter what kind of operations they undertake? Is Israel unable to commit any wrongdoing in the eyes of its No. 1 supporter, protector and financial source, the United States?

Are Palestinians not safe anywhere? Don't they have any rights to live peacefully, to keep their culture alive and to inform the rest of the world about their version of the

The K-State Palestinian Student Association condemns this action and hopes that the rest of the world - including the United States - will do so also.

PSU, Dole Inc. join in promoting mascot

By MIKE MCQUEEN Collegian Reporter

Dole Inc. has gone bananas over supporting and promoting athletic activities on the Pittsburg State University campus.

For many years the PSU mascot, the gorilla, has been ridiculed. At games people threw food and other items at the mascot, said Scott Burton, a disc jockey at KSSC radio in Pittsburg who decided it was time to do something about it.

In March, Burton contacted Dole and Chiquita Brands Ltd. in Boston to see if they would be interested in promoting the PSU mascot at sporting events.

Although Chiquita was not interested. Dole "was all for the support," Burton said. "I flew to San Francisco and had two days of 'banana talk'.'

Since PSU is the only collegiate school in the country to have the gorilla as a mascot, Dole was ready for the promotion. The school has two mascots - a male gorilla Gus and a female gorilla Gussie

The main objective of the program is to "do something positive with the mascot name," Burton said.

Dole has been supporting the mascot by donating balloons to the cheerleading squad, donating $100 scholarships for "player of the game" at football games and supplying the football team with bananas for road game meals. The bananas have been supplied through a local Dillon Companies Inc. grocery store.

Dole has also been sponsoring 'give-away nights" at the home football games. They give away items such as jackets, caps and keychains. The idea behind the give-aways is to get more people to attend the games.

Burton is pleased with the job he has done.

"Everybody wins," Burton said. "It's good for the university and it's good publicity for Dole."

Dole might continue sponsoring the "give-away" games in basketball season.

Rick Utchell, manager of fresh products for Dole, said they will decide on continuing the promotion after a proposal on future activities is passed.

Conferences close 'Decade of Women'

By LEANNE STOWE Staff Writer

July marked the end of the United Nations "Decade of Women."

In recognition of the decade, more than 11,000 people, mostly women, met in Nairobi, Kenya, for two conferences on women in July, said Linda Richter, associate professor of political science, who attended the conferences.

Richter spoke to about 30 people Friday about her experiences at the conferences - the conference on the "Decade of Women," and a nongovernmental organizational conference which ended the 1975-85 decade of women. Richter said the two conferences blended into one on the subject of "Equality, Development and Peace." The United Nations sent 3,500 government representatives, but the majority came for the nongovernmental conference which anyone could attend.

Richter, whose talk was sponsored by the Women's Studies division during the weekly Friday Focus on women, said she came away from the conferences feeling optimistic.

"There was a tremendous effort involved in getting that many together," she said. "There were tremendous achievements and development of literacy. I left in an optimistic mood."

Richter said some of the women at the conferences had sold everything they owned to get there. She said most events were held outdoors because more people came to the conferences than were expected. "There were housing shortages and everything, but everyone was so glad to have so many there. It was a great time," she said.

Richter said more women need to get involved in international affairs.

"Women are over half the world's population, do two-thirds of the world's work hours, earn less than one-tenth of the world's income and own one-hundredth of the world's property," she said. "This is the way it was 10 years ago, and it is the way it is now.

The conference covered many issues including customs, repressing laws concerning women and maternity leave, Richter said.

Although the United States has not yet implemented a maternity leave program, 69 countries have, Richter said. Because the decade of women is over some countries have seen repression in women's issues.

"In Pakistan the testimony of women in any case is worth half that of a man," she said. "In the case of rape, the woman must have three good Muslim witnesses to prove her Richter said one sign she saw at the conference fit the circumstance.

"I saw a sign that said, 'If it's not appropriate for women, then it's not appropriate," she said.

Vehicle shop requests adequate facility

By CLAUDIA SANGSTER Collegian Reporter

Employees of the University Facilities Vehicle Maintenance Shop were once victims of two costly moves from building to building, but wouldn't mind moving again.

But it appears they may have found a permanent home. The maintenance shop is currently located on the east end of the Military Science building, where it has been since October 1981.

The shop was formerly located where Throckmorton Hall stands. In 1978, it was moved to the carpenter shop located by the power plant. This move cost the University an estimated $20,000, said Art Sykes, building of Throckmorton," Sykes

"There has been some talk of moving again in the future," said Jim Shepard, University architect. "The possible location would be north of Throckmorton. The move would allow for adequate parking."

What the maintenance shop directors want is a new building. The directors have discussed a new building, but no official plans were formulated. Sykes said the proper facilities could save the University thousands of dollars.

The current building is not adequate to protect the 300-320 state and University vehicles maintained by the shop. The current problem is caused by roof leakage. With the proper facilities the maintenance shop could better protect and maintain the vehicles, Sykes said.

When Throckmorton was built, land near Throckmorton was to be left for the maintenance shop, but was given to the Department of Horticulture, said Tom Lee, supervisor of vehicle and grounds maintenance.

The shop, which maintains all state and University vehicles and equipment, had to make another move in October of 1981.

At its current location, the Military Science building, more construction was necessary to provide for the

"At the Military Science building air lines had to be installed throughout the area and an office was added for the checking out of vehicles," Shepard said.

"When you're a mechanic shop you

WARSAW; Poland - The Communist government dueled the outlawed Solidarity labor movement Sunday in Poland's first parliamentary elections in five years, with the government saying defeat of a Solidarity boycott would confirm approval of its policies.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said turnout apparently was heavy nationwide. Lech Walesa, Solidarity's former chairman, said, however, that indications were most voters in his home city of Gdansk observed the boycott.

Urban told at a Warsaw news conference early official estimates indicated turnout was running at least 12 percent higher than local council elections in June 1984. The government reported a 75 percent voter turnout then, despite a Solidarity boycott call.

Since the Communist Party carefully screened all candidates and reserved 85 percent of the 460 seats in Parliament for itself and two smaller allied parties, the only issue in doubt was how many of Poland's 26 million eligible voters would cast

"The results will give an answer to a question of how deep stabilization is running," Vice Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski told Polish journalists after voting in Warsaw, the official Polish news agency PAP said.

Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, who voted early with his wife, Barbara, has said an amnesty may be offered to the officially acknowledged 280 political prisoners if voter turnout exceeds 75 percent.

Yugoslavia had not given the United States any formal notice of its refusal to detain Abbas.

In Belgrade, a Yugoslavian government spokesman who refused to be identified, said: "We have good relations with the PLO, and we support the Palestinian cause. You can draw your own conclusions."

Under the extradition treaty between the United States and Yugoslavia, "we have up to two months during which they are supposed to detain him and give us an opportunity to file formal extradition

The release of Abbas by Italian authorities was a disappointment to U.S. officials who had been triumphant over the dramatic capture of the four pirates. Abbas and another PLO associate were taken into custody along with the four pirates when Navy fighter jets forced their Egyptian airliner to land at a NATO base in Italy.

KC stays alive with 2-0 win over Toronto

Royals close margin to 3-2 with victory in home finale

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Danny Jackson, starting for the first time in 10 days, scattered eight hits and the Kansas City Royals scrambled to a 2-0 victory over Toronto that trimmed the Blue Jays' lead in the American League playoffs to 3-2.

The best-of-seven series shifts back to Toronto for Game 6 Tuesday night, with the Blue Jays still needing one victory to bring the World Series to Canada for the first Jackson, who last started on Oct. 3 and mopped up with one scoreless inning in Game 1, was far from perfect. But the left-hander, who struck out six and walked one, was good enough when he had to be in keeping the explosive Blue Jays off the scoreboard.

Toronto put runners on second and third with no outs in the fifth and loaded the bases with two outs in the sixth. Both times, Jackson was equal to the challenge.

The Royals, meanwhile, came out attacking against Jimmy Key, who was hit hard in Game 2 and wound up with a no-decision in a game Toronto eventually won in 10 innings.

Kansas City scored once in the first inning on George Brett's groundout, and got their second run in the second on a sacrifice fly by Darryl Motley. Some adventuresome baserunning helped the Royals score both times.

Jackson had relatively little trouble through the first three innings. He gave up a two-out double to George Bell in the first, struck out the side in the second and yielded a one-out single in the third to Tony Fernandez.

The middle three innings were a different story for the 24-year-old Jackson

Bell led off the fourth with a single and Cliff Johnson followed with a single to left. Bell tried to take third on the play as left fielder Lonnie Smith had to wait for a high hop, but Smith's throw to third got Bell.

The play was a close one, and Toronto Manager Bobby Cox, who has seen several tough calls go against his team, argued the decision with umpire Dale Ford.

In the fifth, Garth Iorg opened with a single and Ernie Whitt pulled a double into the right-field corner that sent Iorg to third. Jackson managed

The Blue Jays tried to rally again in the sixth after two outs. Singles by Jesse Barfield and Willie Upshaw and a walk to lorg on a full-count pitch loaded the bases.

Kansas City pitching coach Gary Blaylock then visited the mound, and the trip may have settled down Jackson, who got Whitt on a weak grounder to second on the first pitch.

The Royals, determined not to go down without a fight, got on the scoreboard early with help from three unlikely sources and one familiar one.

Smith, just 1-for-14 in the playoffs, led off the game for Kansas City with a double to left, the first of his three hits. Then, with Willie Wilson at the plate, Smith took off for third and stole it with a head-first slide.

After Wilson struck out, Brett came up. The Blue Jays, who intentionally walked Brett twice in Game 4, elected to pitch to the man with a career .340 playoff average. Brett did not get a hit, but his grounder to shortstop drove home Smith.

In the Royals' second, Frank White opened with a single, just his third hit in 16 series at-bats. Steve Balboni, 1-for-15, followed with a single to left, and when White hustled into third ahead of the throw, Balboni lumbered to second just ahead of the relay throw.

Motley then hit a sacrifice fly deep to center that made it 2-0. Balboni took third on the play, but Key struck out Jim Sundberg and got Buddy Biancalana on a grounder to end the inning.

Key, who did not survive the fourth inning in Game 2, constantly pitched with runners on base through the first five innings.

Smith started the third with a single, and singled again in the fifth. Both times he tried to steal second, but both times the tactic backfired. In the third, Smith lost track of Wilson's pop fly and failed to get back to first in time to beat a relay throw. In the fifth, Key made a pickoff throw to first that trapped Smith.

Balboni and Motley singled with two outs in the fourth, but Key got out of that jam when Sundberg grounded out.

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Danny Jackson was in trouble, and so were the Kansas City Royals. But Jackson hung on, and so did the Royals to send the American League playoffs back to Toronto for Game 6.

"I went out there and really concentrated and put all of that energy into doing just one thing, pitching my best," Jackson said after hurling Kansas City to a 2-0 victory. "I was real pumped up, but I was able to throw the ball where I wanted to.

"I got some good plays behind me. Lonnie (Smith) and Willie (Wilson) made some good catches behind me. I was able to get the ball in on the hands of the batters when I needed to and get them to hit ground balls."

Jackson pitched out of trouble in the fourth, fifth and sixth innings, finishing with an eighthitter. He struck out six.

"He had a good breaking ball," said Blue Jays first baseman Willie Upshaw. "We let him establish it early by swinging at it out of the strike zone."

Toronto outfielder George Bell said Jackson was getting the Blue Jays with his slider.

"He would throw you that high fastball and then give you a low slider away," Bell said. "He'll make you swing at his pitch because that slider looks like a ball before it breaks."

Royals third baseman George Brett continued to insist the pressure was on the Blue Jays as the series shifts to Toronto for a game Tuesday and the seventh, if necessary, on Wednesday.

"Some of the guys got on me yesterday when I said that, but I think they've got to feel a little pressure," Brett said.

Several records fall in Cards' 12-2 win; Dodgers lose lead

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Cardinals, shocked by a bizarre runaway tarpaulin accident that felled Vince Coleman, rebounded with a record-setting 12-2 victory over Los Angeles Sunday night behind the pitching of John Tudor. The victory evened the National League playoffs at two games apiece.

Tito Landrum, Coleman's replacement in left field, had a record-tying four singles and drove in three runs in his first start in the playoffs.

Landrum, a playoff hero for Baltimore in 1983, and Jack Clark set league playoff records with two hits apiece in the Cardinals' nine-run second inning, and Terry Pendleton drove in three runs in the inning. The Cardinals had eight hits in the inning, all singles, and sent 14 men to the plate.

The Cardinals wound up with 15 hits that included the four by Landrum, three more by Clark and two apiece by Ozzie Smith and Cesar Cedeno. Clark also scored three times.

Tudor, the loser in Game 1 at Los Angeles, retired the first 14 Dodger batters and had a no-hitter going until Steve Sax doubled to lead off the sixth. Tudor, 21-8 during the season, allowed just three hits, walked two and struck out five through seven innings. He lost his shutout when Bill Madlock led off the seventh with a home run.

The Cardinals, meanwhile, dispensed with Dodgers starter Jerry Reuss in their big second inning, the second straight playoff game the Dodgers failed to get a starting pitcher past the third inning.

The Cardinals kayoed Bob Welch in the third inning Saturday as they beat the Dodgers 4-2 in Game 3.

The Cardinals will send Bob Forsch, 9-6, against Game 1 winner Fernando Valenzuela, 17-10, in Game 5 here tonight. The best-of-7 series shifts to Los Angeles on Wednesday.

Coleman, who stole 110 bases during the season and is a key element in the Cards breakaway offense, was injured about two hours before the game. The accident occured as the grounds crew prepared to cover the field in a light rain, using an automatic, retractable system that rolls the tarp over the infield on a long metal cylinder.

Coleman had trotted in from the outfield on his way to the dugout, then turned to throw his glove to a teammate when the mechanism was Shawnee Call contributed six kills for K-State and Kelly Carlson had 10 digs.

"We went out Friday and concentrated well and played well against both teams," Nelson said. "We controlled the tempo with tough serving and superb defense."

Nelson also contributed the successful weekend outing and the recent play of the Wildcats to the play of Whitney.

"Renee is seeing the defenses well," Nelson said. "She is running the offense superbly." The next contest for the Wildcats will be Tuesday when they travel to Lincoln, Neb., to take on the University of Nebraska Cornhuskers. Nebraska is rated fourth in the nation.

Nebraska players are in the top 10 of virtually every statistical catagory in the Big Eight Conference and are a dominating force in the conference.

Last year the Cornhuskers were the Big Eight champions with a perfect 10-0 mark in conference play. Their overall record was 29-4 last season.

"This will definitely be our toughest game to date," Nelson said. "We played exceptionally well against these two (WSU and Tulsa) teams Friday and feel we are going into the Nebraska game well prepared."

Coleman misses game following freak injury

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Cardinals' hopes in the National League playoffs suffered a jolt Sunday when rookie outfielder Vince Coleman's left leg was pinned under a tarpaulin device, forcing him out of Game 4 against the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Coleman, the offensive catalyst of St. Louis' attack with a rookie-record 110 stolen bases, "will obviously not play tonight," team doctor Stan London said, "and there will be a further determination later."

Coleman was replaced in the lineup by Tito Landrum in left field.

London said the device rolled up the outside part of Coleman's left leg, causing a severe bruise from ankle to mid-thigh. He said preliminary X-rays were negative.

"The circulatory and neurological systems in the leg were intact and the ankle and knee joints were intact. It just hurts a lot," London said. "Right now we've got ice on it to keep the swelling down."

According to witnesses, Coleman was leaving the field when he wheeled and threw his glove toward a Cardinal coach. That is when the tarp was activated.

Dodger batboy Howard Hughett, who was on the field when the accident occurred, said the device "rolled up his leg and went up to his knee before it was removed. His face was scrunched up and it looked like he was in agony."

"He was able to get his right foot out of the way but it caught his left foot," said Cards' utility player Mike Jorgensen.

"We just rolled away the cage, we got the balls off the field," Jorgensen said. "Vince was getting ready to throw his glove to (coach) Dave Ricketts. He (Coleman) looked scared. He was hurting. I don't think they (the grounds crew) were able to hear because of all the screaming."

His teammates, having just concluded batting practice, let out yells when Coleman was caught.

Herrmann leads San Diego to 31-20 victory over Chiefs

By The Associated Press

SAN DIEGO - Quarterback Mark Herrmann fired two touchdown passes, including a fourth-quarter strike to Eric Sievers, as the San Diego Chargers snapped an 0-11 drought against division opponents by defeating Kansas City 31-20 Sun-

The victory in the National Football League game improved San Diego's record to 3-3, while the Chiefs fell to 3-3.

Herrmann's second touchdown pass covered 10 yards and climaxed a nine-play, 80-yard drive. Herrmann was 6-of-6 during the go-ahead drive for 71 yards and finished the day with 26 completions in 36 throws for 320 yards.

San Diego added an insurance score with 6:17 remaining on Tim Spencer's 1-yard touchdown run.

It was the first time San Diego defeated an AFC West rival since beating Kansas City on Dec. 11, 1983. Rookie Chargers cornerback Wayne Davis ended a late scoring threat by the Chiefs when he picked off a pass by quarterback Bill Kenney in the end zone and returned it to the Chargers' 26-yard line with 3:45 remaining.

Herrmann, shaking off two firsthalf fumbles, helped lift the Chargers into a 17-17 tie at intermission as San Diego rallied for three second-quarter scores. With San Diego trailing 10-0, Herrmann tossed a 39-yard scoring strike to Charlie Joiner midway through the second period. It was the 61st touchdown reception for Joiner, the NFL's all-time leading receiver.

Herrmann, a five-year veteran who assumed the starting role two weeks ago after a knee injury to Dan Fouts, then engineered a nine-play, 89-yard march capped by Gary Anderson's 6-yard touchdown run.

Anderson, a standout in the United States Football League before joining San Diego two weeks ago, went to his left then abruptly reversed his field en route to his first NFL touchdown.

Bob Thomas' 30-yard field goal with nine seconds left in the first half knotted the score at 17. The field goal was set up by Charger linebacker Woodrow Lowe's interception of a Kenney pass, giving San Diego the ball at Kansas City 30.

The Chiefs scored on their first possession with Nick Lowery kicking a 41-yard field goal after a drive stalled at the San Diego 24.

Kenney hit Ethan Horton with a 2-yard touchdown pass with 5:16 gone in the second period before tossing an 18-yard strike to Carlos Carson during the Chiefs' next possession of the period. The Kenney-to-Horton scoring pass came after Herrmann bobbled the snap for his second fumble. The Chiefs Ken Jolly recovered at the Kansas City 41, setting the stage for a seven-play, 59-yard scoring march.

Lowery rounded out the Chiefs' scoring with a 34-yard field goal with 1:14 left in the third quarter.

Joiner, a 17-year veteran who has played in more games than any receiver in NFL history (214), caught six passes for 118 yards.

Lionel James had six receptions for 71 yards, including a 20-yarder in the fourth quarter that put the Chargers on the Kansas City 1-yard line. Spencer, who like Anderson joined the Chargers after a stint in the USFL, dove into the end zone one play later for his first NFL

Spencer gained 26 yards on eight carries while Anderson rushed for 25 vards on 11 attempts.

Kenney, relieved in the late going by Todd Blackledge, completed 24 of 36 throws for 304 yards. Blackledge completed one of four passes for six heard this scream and the thing swallowed him up," third baseman Terry Pendleton said.

After being removed from beneath the tarp, which is powered by a motor and weighs an estimated 1,200 pounds, Coleman was examined at the scene by the team trainer Gene on a stretcher. The grounds crew was preparing

Gieselmann and taken from the field to place the tarpaulin onto the infield to protect the artificial playing surface at Busch Memorial Stadium against a light rain, which had been falling most of the day.

Small, central Missouri town roots for Blue Jays reliever

By The Associated Press

TAOS, Mo. - It's a town of less than 800 almost exactly between St. Louis and Kansas City. It's also home to some of the most fervant Toronto Blue Jays fans this side of the Canadian line.

It's home to Tom Henke, the Blue Jays' reliever who saved one game and won another as Toronto takes a 3-2 lead over the Kansas City Royals home to the Canadian city for Game 6 in the American League Championship Series.

Henke was born in Kansas City, but his parents moved him back home to Taos when he was 3-months-

"When you've got both Missouri teams in the playoffs, it's really tough," said Daryl Heet, who used to play first base in the Osage League with Henke. "And I've been a Cardinal fan as long as I can remember. But when Tom's pitching, I'm rooting for Toronto. I'd like to see Tom get in the series and make some of that money. He's had some rough times."

The town follows Henke at Eiken's Food Store and Hardware, where a hand-lettered "Tom's Record" charted his season next to the Pepsi display. Clippings have spilled from the bulletin board to the paneled wall.

"If we get many more stories, I'll just knock down part of the soda pop case and make the wall bigger," said

The talk at Dave's Service Station and Bar is of the "Terminator," the nickname hung on Henke in Toronto. Dave Pleus, owner of the bar and Henke's former baseball coach, takes orders for "Terminator"

"He was the easiest guy I ever coached," Pleus said. "The only problem I ever had was getting him to throw close to people. He didn't want

"Felt pretty good to see him on the (TV) screen. He could throw harder than anybody I ever had."

Cards

raised from below ground level on the first-base side of homeplate. The metal cylinder apparently rolled up behind Coleman while he wasn't looking, knocked him down and ran up his left leg, causing scrapes and bruises.

Team Dr. Stan London said X-rays showed no breaks, and the injury, while excruciatingly painful, was not considered serious

"I'm OK, and I'll be playing soon," Coleman said shortly before the game began. "I just don't want to be charged with a caught stealing because of this."

No less bizarre than the accident was the inning in which the Cardinals scored their first nine runs against three Los Angeles pitcher.

In the process, the Cards set playoff records for runs, hits and atbats in an inning. And Landrum and Clark set individual NL playoff marks with the two hits apiece. Only Graig Nettles in 1981 with the New York Yankees had previously collected two hits in one inning of a playoff game.

The Cards made it 11-0 in the fifth. McGee, hitting leadoff in place of Coleman, hit a bloop double into left field. He went to third on a chopper back to the mound by Smith and scored on a sacrifice fly to deep right-center by Herr.

The Cards scored their 12th run with two out in the eighth. Clark doubled and Andy Van Slyke singled him home. Landrum's fourth hit, another single, sent Van Slyke to second base.

Triple grocery coupon offers may end soon in local stores

By MIKE ROBBINS Collegian Reporter

A grocery shopper's dream of triple or even quadruple coupon offers has been a reality at many Manhattan supermarkets - but it may not last much longer, with one company already announcing a termination

In the past few weeks, Manhattan grocery shoppers have found many supermarkets increasing the face value of coupons from two to three, even four times the coupon's face value.

But even with the savings available through increased coupon values, local supermarket managers are seeing little response from students seeking to take advantage of the coupon-value wars.

Rob Hayes, manager of the Poyntz Pantry Dutch Maid Supermarket, 1522 Poyntz Ave., said the reason students don't use coupons is because they don't have time to organize them.

'The problem we feel with the students and coupons is that it takes a lot of time to organize them," Hayes said. "First, a person must find the right coupons and then find a place to use them. Second, a person must be a good organizer in order to effectively use the coupons when

Students do not take advantage of "triple-couponing" or "quadruplecouponing" as much as homemakers, Hayes said. He said homemakers generally have more time available to organize a coupon

Hayes said when Dillon's and Safeway decided to go to triple coupons, Dutch Maid decided to make the move to quadruple

"People who are couponing will shop the best buy on coupons," Hayes said. "If one store is doing doubles and the other is doing triple coupons, then the customer will go to the store that offers triple coupons."

Jim Peterson, manager of the Westloop Dillon's Supermarket, 2700 Anderson Ave., said competition between supermarkets is fierce right now, which prompted the increased value for coupons among stores.

"Competition dictates a lot of what we are doing...when Safeway jumped on (triple coupons) we followed suit. You're trying to maintain your share of the market, or even gain a market share," Peterson

"On a 15-cent coupon, if it is triple its value, 30 cents of that we can't make up. We are only going to get credit for the face value," Peterson

While this "automatic" loss on coupons seems to be a hard price to pay, Peterson said the lost dollars may at the same time increase store

"If you look at volume over what you are going to lose on your coupon, it makes you feel better," he said.

Peterson said triple-coupon offers are going to be short-lived, due to the expense of the program for local stores. Dillon's has announced Tuesday will be the last day for triplevalue coupons at their stores.

Jim Papa, manager for the downtown Safeway Supermarket, 222 N. Sixth St., said that while competition is fierce between supermarkets, the customer is the big win-

"Anything over the face value of the coupon is a loss to the store - we don't recover that," Papa said. "The customers are the true winner in this type of situation."

'Hopefully, the whole thing you're trying to do is get the customer in a habit of shopping your store," Hayes said. "So once you quit offering coupon offers, they will continue shopping with you. That's the advantange for the retailer."

Synthetic blood gives hope

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO - A new artificial blood substitute has shown promising results in animal experiments and may eventually significantly reduce transmission of human blood-borne diseases such as AIDS, a researcher says.

The substitute "appears to be the first artificial blood product that successfully imitates red blood cells in delivering oxygen to tissue," research scientist Ljubomir Djordjevich said in a

American Society Anesthesiologists.

In addition, he said, the substitute can be stored up to six months, compared to 21 days for natural blood, and can be given to people with different blood types, which could save time and lives in emergencies.

In tests with rats, rabbits and dogs "that had almost all of their natural blood replaced by (synthetic blood) the animals maintained routine body function by paper to be presented today to the breathing normal room air," the scientist said.

The synthetic substance, the researcher reported, "may significantly reduce the risk of causing transfusion reactions and transmitting blood-borne diseases such as AIDS and hepatitis."

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, destroys the body's ability to fight off disease. It is incurable. Hepatitis is a liver disease that can be fatal and has been a major risk in blood transfu-

Poll examines school-prayer views

NEW YORK - While many Americans have made it clear they favor a return of prayer to the classroom, a surprising number — 25 percent - say they think the separation of religion and government, a pillar of the Constitution, is a bad silent prayer in American schools is widespread, with large majorities supporting it in every age, race, economic and political group.

One exception was among Jews, where a majority opposed school prayer. Jewish leaders have expressed concern that the Christian majority in the United States could impose its religious beliefs in the schools On Oct. 3, the Senate Judiciary Committee voted 12-to-4 for a proposed constitutional amendment that would allow silent prayer in public schools. If approved by Congress and ratified by 38 states within seven years, the proposal would become law and reverse a June ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court that barred public schools from holding moments of silence if students were being encouraged to pray.

Seventy-four percent of the respondents in the Media General-AP poll said prayer in schools did not violate the constitutional principle of church-state separation. Twenty percent said it did violate that principle, and the rest were unsure.

Bad checks increase; Union stresses policy

By MARIBETH GOTTSCHALK Collegian Reporter

Every semester the Union check cashing service has a problem with an increasing number of checks that do not clear, said Jack Thoman, Union accountant.

Each day the Union business office receives about 10 to 15 checks that do not clear, Thoman said. There is a great deal of time required to return a check to a customer.

The Union business office sends a certified notice to the customer informing them that their bank is not able to cover the check. This process of sending the notice costs the office about $2.92. However, the Union will charge the offender $8, which covers the supplies used in the office and the time and labor involved of the employees.

"It doesn't take near as much time for students to stand there and cash 15 checks as it will this person in this office to work up the constant paper work and bookkeeping involved, that is why a service charge is assessed by every merchant in town,' Thoman said.

Students will give a variety of seemingly valid excuses, from bookkeeping errors to parents forgetting to deposit money in the students' accounts.

He said students may get their loan checks, then proceed to write checks for housing payments, books and tuition and then mail the loan check home for their parents to deposit. But because of the procedure each bank follows, the transaction may not appear as soon as the check goes through.

"One could envision how many checks get written to pay for books. We've got more than one student whose check just got lost in transit," Thoman said.

The Union has established a policy to aid in the prevention of customers writing checks which cannot be covered. When three checks have been returned, the person will be put on a check list for six months, as well as being denied use of Union check cashing

This not only prohibits writing personal checks in the Union, but also cashing government checks, pay checks or two-party checks.

"Basically it can become a very expensive way of borrowing money after five checks or more bounce," Thoman said.

$2 million casino skimming trial starts

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Lawyers on both sides have called it a drama, but the casino skimming trial unfolding in U.S. District Court promises a dose of tedium along with the testimony about Las Vegas gambling profits and alleged organized crime intrigue.

The Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force is trying to prove that nine men conspired to gain hidden control of casinos owned by Allen R. Glick's Argent Corp., in gambling proceeds and distributed the money to organized crime interests in Kansas City, Chicago, Milwaukee and Cleveland.

The government is in the second step of a seven-phase presentation it outlined to the jury of six men and six women in the court of Judge Joseph E. Stevens Jr. The trial is expected to last three to four months.

Sheryle Jeans of the strike force outlined a case that will include evidence that contends the defendants manipulated the pension fund $62.75 million loan for Glick to buy them in 1974.

Jeans told jurors they would "bring down the final curtain" on "a drama that began over a decade ago" and she pointed to Joseph J. Aiuppa, 78, whom the government describes as the head of organized to gain control of the Stardust and Fremont casinos by arranging a crime operations in Chicago, as the key man in the case.

She said the government would present a recording in which Joseph Lombardo, 58, of Chicago, calls Aiuppa "the only guy that can make the decision," and told jurors at one point they will "hear the money slapped on the table as it is being

Faculty petition against 'Star Wars' program

By WAYNE PRICE Managing Editor

If Congress approves funding for President Reagan's proposed Strategic Defense Initiative program, millions of dollars would most likely be distributed to various universities for research.

But several K-State science and physics faculty have signed a petition pledging, "...neither to solicit nor accept SDI funds..." and are also encouraging other University faculty to sign.

Besides the Department of Physics, the petition is circulating in the Division of Biology, and the chemical engineering, geology, mathematics, and psychology departments.

The drafters of the petition, Alvin Compaan, professor of physics, and Talat Rahman, assistant professor of physics, claim that 80 percent of physics department faculty - 21 of 26 - have signed the petition against the defense program labeled "Star Wars" by its critics.

Most of the petitions are expected to be completed sometime this week and faculty members from the various departments said they have approximately 75 faculty signatures, although the number is expected to rise as the petition is circulated.

Compaan said the results of the petition will be sent to state political representatives within the next two weeks in addition to numerous professional societies and media.

"We intend to raise this issue before the public and ultimately get this program stopped," Compaan

Petitions against SDI in academic circles are not new. The latest issue of Science Magazine reports that more than 350 full-time faculty members and 700 graduate students or post-doctoral fellows from such institutions as Carnegie-Mellon University, Cornell University. University of Pennsylvania, and Princeton University have begun an academic boycott of SDI.

Because of the program's estimated cost, SDI has also been labeled the "Great Pork Barrel in the Sky," meaning a large number of institutions could easily obtain SDI funds. According to the Federation of Scientists, the American Department of Energy and other agencies will spend more than $8 billion over the next five years alone on laser and particle beam research related to SDI.

Both Compaan and Rahman, who work in solid state physics, or material physics, conduct research which would be vital to SDI's production and success. Compaan's research primarily deals with lasers and semi-conductors while Rahman's emphasis, the study of optical surfaces, involves a lot work with computers. Because of faculty members' work in these areas, the physic's department could easily obtain SDI money, they said.

"If the faculty wanted some of the funding," Compaan said, "there would be no real problem in getting

"(But) the petition does not mean we're against defense research." Compaan said, adding that SDI funds and Department of Defense funds are separate.

While most of the faculty who have signed the petition cite the technical unfeasiblity of SDI as a reason for the boycott, many harbor political feelings as well.

"The program is stupid. It really is," said Ben Kyle, professor of chemical engineering. "I'm surprised the government, which is supposed to managed by rational men, would want to spend money on such a hair-brained scheme especially when they scream about budget deficits. "The main objection I see is that we're trying to solve a problem with technology which should be solved with diplomacy and negotiations." David Rintoul, assistant professor of biology, agrees.

"It (SDI) doesn't seem to be a viable option in a number of

By COLLEEN WILSON Staff Writer

to developing key opportunities for excellence in education lies in the hands of teachers to "encourage, praise, trust and inspire students" to risk and involve themselves in new experiences, said Charles V. Willie, Harvard University professor of education and urban studies.

"Confidence in the teacher is the main issue," Willie said Monday in Union Forum Hall. "Once won, resistance against being educated gives way to trust."

Willie, noted for his view that the American educational system should adopt a philosophy of inclusion rather than exclusion, gave his philosophy on "Alternative Routes of Excellence.

Willie stressed that all students are not the same, each requiring different amounts of time and encouragement. A difference in adapting to college exists both between racial backgrounds and between cultures, Willie said. He believes the educational system recognizes these differences and the many diverse pathways to excellence. Willie illustrated his philosophy by telling a story of Benjamin Mays, former president of Morehouse College, Alanta, Ga., and spiritual mentor of the late Martin Luther King. Willie said Mays' success is directly related encouragement from his teachers throughout his education.

Mays was born Aug. 1, 1895, in a small town in South Carolina. Since Mays' parents were born into slavery, he knew nothing of his roots, so he concentrated on his future. He was the youngest of eight children. One sibling completed high school but the rest only finished the fifth grade. Mays graduated from high school when he was 22.

In 1917, he entered Bates College, Lewiston, Maine, where he lived in a "predominantly white world," Willie said. During his first semester, Mays received his first D. He was humiliated and embarrassed, however, he balanced the D by taking first place in a declamation contest when he recited the supposed speech of John Adams.

Mays was ridiculed by classmates for his pronunciation of words in one of his classes. After his professor counseled him, he improved and got an A in the class. Mays received support and encouragement from all of his teachers and by the time of his graduation in 1920, he was one of 15 in his class to graduate with honors.

"His successfulness enabled him to dismiss the myth of inferiority of blacks and superiority of whites."

"Mays' situation demonstrates the kind of support that teachers must render to those who are called 'disadvantaged,'" Willie said. "They praised him, trusted him and encouraged him. This is the role teachers must play."

Willie said people are all disadvantaged in one way or See WILLIE, Page 3

Severe earthquake hits Soviet republic

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW - A severe earthquake hit the Central Asian republic of Tadzhikistan, destroying factories, offices and homes, the Soviet Union said Monday. Tass reported "loss of life," but gave no details.

The official news agency said the epicenter of Sunday night's quake was some 145 miles northeast of the Tadzhik capital of Dushanbe.

Seven sharp tremors rocked the city of Leninabad, which has a population of 139,000, and the nearby report fatalities in natural disasters

Gafurov, the government newspaper Izvestia said.

Tass said that around Kairakum, "adobe houses were destroyed in villages and a landslide swept away an asphalt-surfaced road."

The agency said the quake registered force 8 on the 12-point Soviet scale. Force 8 is equivalent to 6.2 on the Richter scale and is enough to cause severe damage and many casualties.

The Soviet Union often does not

> Neither report gave any details about the number of casualties and provided only a sketchy idea of the damage caused.

> More than 1 million people live in the Leninabad administrative region, which covers 10,400 square miles in northern Tadzhikistan.

The affected area is the site of some of the most powerful hydroelectric stations in Central Asia, but there was no immediate word in the news media about whether dams had been damaged in the quake.

A telegram from the Kremlin leadership expressing deep condolences to the families of those who died in the quake said the disaster damaged places of residence, factories "engineering structures."

Nobel winners help fight heart disease

By The Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. - Research into a rare defect in the body's internal control of cholesterol that won the Nobel prize for two Americans is opening up new strategies for understanding and defeating heart disease, the nation's biggest killer.

Drs. Michael S. Brown and Joseph L. Goldstein of the University of Texas Health Science Center at Dallas unraveled a flaw in the bodies of people who are struck by heart attacks at unusually early ages. And in the process, they discovered a key mechanism for keeping the body's cholesterol levels in check.

The Nobel Institute in Stockholm, Sweden, announced Monday that the two men, who were attending a conference in Cambridge, had won the 1985 Nobel Prize in medicine.

One outgrowth of their research is attempts to rid the blood of dangerous amounts of cholesterol by tinkering with the built-in machinery that ordinarily scours it from the

However, their discoveries have also revealed important clues for understanding how the body's cells absorb vital nutrients and even how genes are constructed.

The scientists' work has focused on people with hypercholesterolemia, an inherited disease that affects about 1 in 500 Americans. The levels of cholesterol in their bloodstreams is far higher than normal, and they are prone to heart trouble. The disease accounts for about 5 percent of all people who have a heart attack under age 60.

Cholesterol is a waxy alcohol that dissolves in fat but not water. To be carried in the blood, it must be attached to a water-soluble protein, known as low-density lipoprotein or LDL, that is made in the liver.

The body's cells need cholesterol to make cell walls and produce hormones. But when excessive amounts circulate in the bloodstream, it clogs arteries and causes atherosclerosis, the major underlying cause of heart disease.

Diseases of the heart and blood vessel killed 985,040 Americans in 1982 and accounted for nearly half of all deaths.

Brown and Goldstein discovered that cells usher cholesterol into themselves through gateways,

Land Institute works to change agriculture

By TIM STRODA Collegian Reporter

The Land Institute in Salina is conducting experiments on perennial plants that may change farmers' approach to agriculture production, Wes Jackson, director of the institute said Monday night.

The institute is working on crossing different strains of perennial plants - which do not require replanting each year the effects of alternating two or more crops in the same row and alternating rows of plants.

"We are working to get people in agriculture to look at using perennial crops, because once they are established all it takes to grow them is sunlight," Jackson said.

A perennial plant, such as rye grass, could also help prevent soil erosion because the plants' roots extend deep into the soil and prevent soil from eroding, Jackson said during the speech to approximately 50 farmers in Onaga.

"The success of American monoculture agriculture has been devastating to our soil. Our work is to find substitute crops that can be grown on sloping land with minimal soil erosion in place of annual grain crops," he said.

The institute is searching for answers to four basic questions: Can perennials be grown economically? Will use of a mixture of perennials enhance yield goals? Will the perennials be fertile? And will insects or weeds wipe out perennial crops when they are established?

Jackson said he believes it is important to apply the ideas learned from the institute's research to crop production in the United States and developing nations.

"What is more important to transmit to the third world is ideas and principles instead of technology.

Technology will not rule farmers of the future, he said, "farmers of the future will be naturalists" - much more than farmers of the '80s.

Duarte sends family to U.S.

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — President Jose Napoleon Duarte, whose oldest daughter was kidnapped a month ago, said Monday he sent his other daughters and grandchildren to the United States after threats were made to kidnap another of his relatives.

Shortly after an American plane left Ilopango military air base carrying what sources said were 15 to 18 people, Duarte told journalists that telephoned threats of another kidnapping had been

"The question of the trip that my children and grandchildren are taking today is because I received more threats of another kidnapping, and I'm taking the precautions to protect my children and my grandchildren, and the men of the family are all staying with me," the president said.

"We have received telephone calls, and then this morning there was a car following one of my daughters and we had to take special precautions to protect them," Duarte said.

He said three daughters and his grandchildren were on the plane, but he did not disclose its destination in the United States. Sources told The Associated Press on Monday night that 15 to 18 people left the country in an American plane, and were presumed to be flying to the United States.

19 injured in 120-vehicle pileup

CRICK, England - One hundred twenty vehicles smashed into each other Monday on a fog-bound stretch of a superhighway in Northamptonshire, injuring 19 motorists, police said.

Police said two of the 19 injured were seriously hurt in the massive pileup on the M1 highway near the village of Crick. Ambulances and fire engines from three counties north of London rushed to the scene. A senior police commander on the scene said motorists failed to slow down when fog closed in on the heavily traveled highway and

Mubarak said he hoped the cloud hanging over relations between the two allies would soon be dissipated, but for the moment, he said he was still "very upset."

Syria finds possible hostage's body

WASHINGTON - Syrian authorities have discovered the body of an elderly man who washed ashore near the port city of Tartus, and U.S. officials said Monday they were seeking to learn if it was that of Leon Klinghoffer, who was killed during last week's hijacking of the Achille Lauro.

State Department press officer Dan Lawler said there was no immediate confirmation that the body was that of Klinghoffer, a 89-year-old invalid from New York City who was a passenger aboard

The Italian news agency AGI on Monday quoted legal sources involved in the interrogation of the four hijackers as saying Klinghoffer's body "may have been found." The report said magistrates were notified of the possible discovery during questioning of the four prisoners.

Lawler said American officials are seeking identification of the body. He added that Syrian authorities have indicated they are willing to turn the body over to U.S. custody if it is identified as that of an American citizen.

FCC hopes to reduce phone rates

WASHINGTON - Lowering long-distance telephone charges is a top priority for federal regulators, Federal Communications Commission Chairman Mark S. Fowler told telephone executives

In a speech prepared for the United States Telephone Association meeting in San Antonio, Texas, Fowler said, "we still must deload toll rates one way or another." A text of the speech was released

Since the beginning of long-distance service, rates for toll calls have been "loaded" with a part of the cost of running wires from the phone company to almost every home and office in America.

With the breakup of the Bell System, that method of paying for local connections is becoming less practical.

The car was chased into Waubaunsee County, where it was stopped. The two men inside got out and ran. They were captured after a short foot chase.

The inmates, missing since Friday, were identified as Randy L. Mahlandt, 26, and Rickie Cagle, 33.

They were discovered missing during an emergency head count taken after a house near the prison was burglarized.

The escapees are believed to have stolen a car after breaking into a house near the prison early Friday. They were last seen Saturday afternoon when they stole a pickup truck from a house in Tonganoxie, where they had tied up three men in a house. The pickup truck was found abandoned in Lawrence.

Hart predicts Democratic sweep

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Democrats will regain control of the U.S. 6 and capture the presidency in 1988 because of President Reagan's "callous and unfeeling policies," Colorado Sen. Gary Hart predicted Sunday.

Reagan administration policies have led to loss of jobs, an unfavorable foreign trade balance, failure to clean up hazardous waste sites, fewer educational opportunities and declines in civil

'The Democratic Party leadership of the future clearly does not believe in letting these things happen," said Hart, who appeared at a fundraiser for U.S. Rep. Alan Wheat of Kansas City.

Hart said that he has managed to reduce his debt from his 1984 bid for the Democratic nomination for president from $3.5 million to $1.25 million. He said he would make a decision within two months on whether to seek re-election to the Senate next year.

Hart, who was critical of the way his presidential campaign was covered by the national media, said he would issue a book on defense

"It will be controversial," Hart said. "It will stir up debate on issues more important than the age-old debate between liberals and conservatives on how much more the defense budget should be known as receptors, that recognize LDL.

"The more receptors you have, the faster cholesterol is removed from the bloodstream," said Goldstein.

They found that the number of these LDL receptors is greatly reduced in people with hypercholesterolemia. So cholesterol continues to circulate rather than being taken away.

"When they discovered the receptor in 1974, that changed the whole focus of thinking about the problem of cholesterol metabolism and put the attention on cells and how they interact with low-density

"Practical applications will be forthcoming, we would predict," Goldstein said at a new conference

Drug companies have produced several experimental drugs that seem to lower cholesterol levels, but none of these is yet available.

Role-playing may replace board games

> By DONNA COPE Collegian Reporter

Classic board games, such as Monopoly, may become a thing of the past as sophisticated role-playing games and war games take over as the favorite new pastime.

These complicated games are now available in the Manhattan area at The Master Gamer, in the Laramie Plaza shopping complex.

"I've been wanting a store like this for awhile, I used to have to go Kansas City (to find games and accessories)," said Eric Heinerikson, junior in industrial engineering.

"The more I talked to people, the more I found that there were lots of gamers in the Manhattan and Fort Riley area; they just didn't know how to find one another," said Royal Minida and Royal Dowdy are the owners of The Master Gamer. They said they enjoy playing "any game on the face of the earth."

"We've been kicking around the idea of owning our own store for four years," Minida said. "When we got here and there was nothing, we decided to go ahead."

The Master Gamer offers different types of games, including role playing games such as Dungeons and Dragons. The store also offers trivia games, gaming magazines, puzzles, posters minatures and T-shirts.

Dowdy said Dungeons and Dragons allows a player to create a character and put it into a circumstance.

"It's like a theater of the mind," said Bob Pickney, senior in horticulture and an avid gamer.

The use of spells has given Dungeons and Dragons bad publicity in the past, Dowdy said. The spells used in Dungeons and Dragons are based on mythology in the Middle Ages. The spells are factors in the game, but have no bearing on real life. They are used to add creativity to the game, but it can be played without them, he said.

However, Dowdy does not recommend parents buying Dungeons and Dragons for children.

"You can play the good side, but two," he said.

Dowdy does recommend for family use. The game has a definite moral teaching and "teaches good in society," he said.

"We see role playing as important because it teaches creativity, strategy, spontaneity of thought,

Wal-Mart owner tops list

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The richest of the rich in America is worth $2.8 billion, while the poorest of the rich checks in at a mere $150 million. But who's counting?

Forbes magazine, that's who, and its 1985 list of the nation's 400 richest people is topped by Sam Moore Walton of Bentonville, Ark., who has made $2.8 billion through his Wal-Mart discount stores.

Walton, who danced a hula on Wall Street last year when profit goals were met, replaced Gordon Getty, the front-runner for the past two years. Getty dropped to 15th.

Getty's fortune was $4.1 billion last year, but he agreed to divide the family oil trust with other family members, leaving him barely $950 million.

Second place went to Henry Ross Perot of Dallas, founder of Electronic Data Systems, who was $1 billion behind Walton.

Media holdings were up this year, making billionaires of John Kluge and S.I. and Donald Newhouse and adding newcomer

Rupert Murdoch, whose publishing empire has earned him $300 million.

Agriculture and oil were down. Seven Texas oilmen who appeared last year were dropped from the list. So were four Rockefellers and Eight Rockefellers remain on the list, along with the usual number of Cabots, du Ponts, Hunts, Hearsts and Kennedys.

There also are beermakers Busch, Coors and Stroh and vintners Gallo. Robert Guccione, publisher of Penthouse magazine, is on the list with $220 million, but Hugh Hefner of Playboy is not.

Among the rich and famous are Gene Autry, the cowboy star, who has made $150 million in broadcasting and real estate, Ted Turner, the rambunctious Atlantan, with $300 million, and Norman Lear, who brought the nation "All In The Family," and has $175 million.

The list, to appear on Forbes' Oct. 28 issue, provides a fascinating portrait of the rich in America.

The average net worth of the 400 is $335 million. There are 14 billionaires. Only 165 built their fortunes without significant inheritances.

Fourteen are immigrants and 78 are women. At least eight did not finish high school.

Forty-one of the men and 38 of the women are unmarried. And 113 have been divorced.

Most of the rich are not very famous.

James Jaeger, at 37 the youngest of the self-made rich, earned $175 million with automotive radar detectors. Max Palevsky, 61, is a computer designer who made $200 million. Philip Hampson Knight used to sell sneakers. He still does, in a way. He owns $195 million worth of Nike.

In all, 14 people - 12 men and two women — are worth at least $1 billion, compared to 12 billionaires on Forbes list last year.

Among those who did not make the list was New York publisher James Haller Ottaway Sr. With a fortune worth $147 million, he was 401st.

It's hard to ask for help when you feel like you're on trial." He said in stressing the importance of support.

Williard said he once ask his students to prepare a mid-term paper on experience they had had with a teacher. One student said his favorite teacher was a grade school teacher who was a kind person who inspired self worth.

Another student recalled a teacher she had in high school. She said she learned a lot but that her teacher was unkind so she became passive, spoke only when spoken to and to "always had the correct answer." This humiliation carried over into her adulthood and caused anxiety that led to fear of failure.

Willie was amazed that teachers could have such a negative or positive affect on their students.

Time is also a dimension in learning, Willie said. The time alloted in schools may be too narrow for a dyslexic person, black person or others, yet it is still thought that everything should be learned within a time period. Tempo learning may be different for one group that for another, he said.

Mays didn't start college until he was 22. However, Willie stressed that despite his slow beginning, Mays graduated with honors from college and went on to accomplish great things. He served 27 years at Bates University and wrote the book "Born to Rebel" in 1971.

"Mays' teachers taught him in a concrete way that was specific to his circumstances," Willie said. "If he were taught the same way as a white person, he may not have succeeded."

Check bouncing harmful

Individuals who are bouncing checks at the Union are messing around with a privilege the rest of us like having.

The Union's check cashing service is not a temporary loan office, and not a place for students, faculty or staff to pull a financial fast one. The rash of bad checks is indicative of a greater problem: A philosophy expressed in National Lampoon's "Animal House" that says, in essence, "We can do anything we want...we're college students."

We cannot do "anything we want," whether by virtue of our status as students or any other reason. Instead, we should begin realizing that we are accountable for our actions, and that we are not operating in a vacuum what we say and do affects thousands of others every day. To blithely bounce a bad check off the Union might well mean the privilege is denied the rest of us.

Taking unfair advantage of the services the Union offers is rude and selfish. The check cashing service is a great convenience for students, faculty and staff, offered as a service, not some inalienable right. There is an unacceptable arrogance in thinking otherwise.

The Union is encouraged to adhere firmly to its policy of placing names on a "no-cash" list after three bad checks. One bad check is understandable - few first-time account holders are expert accountants, and there is always a chance for an unintentional error that results in a bad check. But after three, one must wonder where the line between accidental and intentional is drawn. The Union draws it here.

The Riley County attorney's office said first-time offenders face a Class A misdemeanor charge that carries a penalty of up to one year in jail and/or a $2,500 fine. After the second offense, it becomes a Class C felony, which is much more serious. The third offense can qualify the defendant for a minimum of one to a maximum of five years in jail and/or a $10,000 fine.

The penalties are stiff, but there is no reason to abuse the check-writing privilege in the first place. Write checks sensibly. Failing to do so may cost a lot more than ever imagined.

Informed students should combat apathy

As people repeat significant sayings which seem outstanding and worth remembering, my high school cohorts and I enjoyed quoting the words of a fellow classmate at any even remotely appropriate time. The saying was adopted after a senior government class period, when a somewhat misguided student remarked at the period's end, "Why should I study government? I'm never going to become a politic!"

My fellow journalism students, jumping at the chance at ostracism, quickly and habitually recited the phrase upon encountering any act of stupidity, both by others and by ourselves. Of course, at this point the mistake in word form was seen as the outrageous failure. But as one examines the statement, it is clear that there exists a much deeper problem - the apathy of the

This classmate was only relating what she truly felt. She believed that it was not desirable, much less necessary, to use even a small amount of her energy learning and understanding what her society is all about. She could care less what was happening outside of her own little world. Her interests were centered entirely on things that should only be sidetracks, and the worst part is that she is representative of such a large group. The apathetic attitudes so common today are both mind-boggling and frightening.

Perhaps the student's immaturity excuses her indifference. It is common for teenagers to be confused about what is important and what is not. But apathy is not limited to the young or the immature. It is evident in all sections of society and there is a good chance it is spreading to a larger group.

To understand this, one must consider some of the bases which determine just how much a person cares. Apathetic attitudes could be increasing because of family situations. Many of the unconcerned people I know have apathetic parents. After all, we often model our attitudes and value systems after those from whom we learn.

Columnist

KATHERINE HERMAN Collegian

Knowledge plays an important part in determining a person's attitude. In this way, perhaps indifference is bred from ignorance, beginning with an apathetic attitude towards education and the learning process. It is astounding how many people at this University pay tuition and play at being a student, but really make little effort.

Unfortunately this indifference does not allow for the stimulation and pleasure which can be derived from learning. Perhaps the concern one must have to become informed is also the concern required to resist an apathetic existence, making the situation a kind of exclusive circle. People who have lost their hunger for knowledge have fallen into the trap of apathy.

My definition of an apathetic attitude is applicable to a wide range of subject matter, that for which it is clear that an informed, concerned status is more beneficial than feeling nothing. It can range from nuclear armament to political knowledge to being purposefully enrolled in school. Of course it does not matter if one is indifferent about the color of the floor in Farrell Library - I am not saying that one must or should concern himself with all things.

Tuesday, October 15, 1985 - 4

However, many people just do not care about important matters, matters which directly affect them. Many believe that how our government deals with our country and others is uninteresting and with this attitude they remain uninformed. People who do not care are people who are easily deceived.

The consequences of an apathetic existence are predictable. First, indifferent people are taken advantage of. If there are no obstacles to hinder their efforts, everyone from the family dog to a powerful dictator will achieve their goals, whether those goals be wetting the carpet or gaining rule over a Becoming dependent on those who are concerned is a second consequence of apathy. When one is informed and aware of one's feelings, a sense of independence exists. However, indifferent people gain nothing from making decisions. The rights, privileges and entire existence of the unconcerned are left up to others.

A third, personal consequence of indifference is associated with a feeling of usefulness and self-worth. Concerned people, with the aforementioned sense of independence, feel that they have a voice in determining their futures. Those who do not care, on the other hand, can feel out of control. The indifferent need only realize their choice of attitude is a personal one and can be changed at any point.

Apathy can have negative affects on the society. Being informed is mandatory to the defeat of this indifference. Every effort at becoming actively concerned brings us one step closer to being an involved student body and an involved nation.

Voice concerns at forum

Today, faculty, students and classified employees will have a chance to voice their opinions concerning the selection of the next University president. An open forum with the Presidential Search Committee is to begin at 8:05 a.m. in Forum Hall.

Classified employees will be heard from 8:05 to 8:30 a.m.; students from 8:30 to 8:55 a.m. and faculty from 9:05 to 9:30 a.m. An open period is scheduled from 9:30 to 10 a.m.

Each speaker will have three minutes to express his or her concerns to the search committee, and a general meeting of the committee will follow the forum. Those not able to participate in the forum are encouraged to write letters to the search committee. Suggestions and possible nominations will be accepted.

Recently there has been much controversy over the Board of Regents' decision to increase the search committee's membership, which was originally to consist of three alumni, three students, three faculty and one administrator.

At the Sept. 20 regents meeting, the alumni representation on the committee was doubled. This led to action on the part of Faculty Senate followed closely by a Student Senate resolution "imploring" the regents to add three faculty and three students to the committee to compensate for what they consider an imbalance.

The question of the committee's representation will be discussed at the regents meeting Friday at Pittsburg State University.

Whether or not the search committee equally represents students, faculty and classified employees, however, is not the subject of today's forum. It is simply an attempt by the search committee to allow those concerned a chance to voice their complaints or offer suggestions as to what the committee should look for in candidates for the presidential position.

It is the perfect opportunity for the search committee to gather information and hear concerns of the University community. It is also an opportunity for those concerned about the future of the University to take a positive step toward increasing communication and ultimately helping to decide the fate of the University by influencing the selection of its new leader.

Resolutions need student support at regents meeting

This Friday in Pittsburg, the Board of Regents will address the issue of unequal representation on the Presidential Search Committee.

Both the Student Senate and Faculty Senate have passed resolutions expressing concern over the imbalance in representation and have proposed that the regents add three faculty and three student members to the search committee in order to alleviate the imbalance.

Because these resolutions were passed unanimously by governmental bodies representing the student body and the faculty, it is tempting to just sit back and relax, believing that the resolutions themselves will be enough to convince the regents to seriously consider the issue and to concur with the resolutions.

If we, as students and faculty, expect full force from these resolutions we need to put our concern into action before the regents. Numbers tend to impress people, and I believe that it would be impressive to have 100 students present at the meeting this Friday to show their concern. At the very least, the regents will be hard-pressed to dismiss the resolutions without serious discussion in the presence of a number of

Obviously, not everyone will be able to attend the meeting due to classes and other commitments. If you cannot attend, please write a letter to the regents to express your concern and dismay over the imbalance in representation offered by the present search committee. The address to write is: Suite 609, Capital Towers, 400 S.W. 8th St., Topeka, Kan., 66603. Our faculty and student senates have taken the first step toward resolving the inequality posed by the search committee. Let's not let the momentum slip, but rather take the second step by acting ourselves. Act now; so you do not have to react later.

Faculty to refuse Star Wars funds

We believe that the Strategic Defense Initiative program, commonly known as "Star Wars," is ill-conceived and dangerous. Anti-ballistic missile defense that is effective and reliable enough to defend the population of the United States against a Soviet attack is not technically feasible.

Efforts to develop a system of more limited capability will only induce a build-up of offensive missiles by the Soviet Union, jeopardize our existing satellite surveillance system, violate existing arms control agreements, stalemate current strategic arms negotiations, and consequently accelerate the nuclear arms race while undermining our national security. Star Wars funding, more so than other sources of funding, is likely to blur the distinction between classified and unclassified research and lead to restrictions of academic freedom at K-State. Star Wars officials openly concede that any successful unclassified project may become classified. The structure of Star Wars research programs also makes it likely that K-State will be part of a "research consortium" with other universities and industries who will be doing classified research. Moreover, the potentially sensitive nature of the research may invoke legal restrictions required by the Export Administration Act.

The Star Wars program and its political acceptance depend crucially on the participation of individual scientists at all levels of research. As one step toward halting this program, we pledge neither to solicit nor accept Star Wars funds and encourage others to join us in this refusal. We hope together to persuade Congress and the public not to support this deeply misguided and dangerous program.

A statement similar to that above has been signed by more than 80 percent of K-State's physics faculty and is presently being circulated in other departments. We encourage all scientists and engineers to join with us in this pledge.

Life after the static line

Time was running out for Bob Gregory. The senior in finance had an irrevokable urge for an activity which would make his heart feel as if it were ripping through his chest - something to make him redefine his sense of excitement. His list included everything from scuba diving to hang

But this experience, the ultimate head rush, had to take place before graduating in

"Oh my God. What am I getting into?" Gregory thought as he began stepping out under the wing of a small Cessna aircraft at

There was only direction to go - down and Gregory realized he had found that excitement: Skydiving.

Skydiving is one of those activities a person is introduced to as a freshman through subliminal ads in the Collegian and video tapes put on by the K-State Parachute

If the idea of falling through the air, supported only by an air-filled canopy, appeals enough to one's senses, then it always stays in the back of your head until motivation finally outlasts procrastination and you find yourself, like Gregory, hanging onto a wing-support for dear life only to let it

"It just happend before you knew what was going on," Gregory said of his first jump. "By the time you got there (on the wing) you were just there; you kind of felt obligated.

"But once you hit the ground it's incredible because it seems like such an accomplishment. I was ready to cartwheel to Manhattan. And I was in Wamego."

Jim Bradley, a chief warrant officer at Fort Riley and head of the jump team on the base, was co-instructor for Gregory's ground school on Sept. 20. Bradley is one of those funny guys who's extremely serious about protocal and safety but still can't seem to help making cuts like, "If your check bounces, so do you."

About 15 people were in Gregory's class. The United States Parachute Association requires a certain amount of ground instruction which, among other things, explains to first-jumpers what exactly they're getting into. At first the idea of attending a class seems boring and monotonous, which it sometimes is, but it's not so ironic that when the first-time jumper is in the plane with just a few minutes before exit, there's a frantic recall for everything taught in that boring and monotonous class.

And for the people who have mastered the sport, there isn't a death wish attitude as some might expect. Safety is an important factor explained Doug Schmidt, a jump instructor in the K-State Parachute Club who is also working on a doctorate in entomology.

"I just don't take chances," Schmidt said. "It just not worth it. You can always jump

Schmidt said there are three to four parachuting deaths a year attributed to people not opening their chute, or cutting away, until they are 200 to 400 feet from the

And because in parachuting, like any sport, there is always opportunity for injury, the jumper must first sign a number of forms releasing the parachute club from any liability. These forms are so complete that one jumper stated, "It seems like you could jump out holding onto a blanket and they still wouldn't get into trouble."

And since these forms are signed almost immediately before boarding the aircraft, anticipation naturally inhibits a careful reading of the forms so it would be to no one's surprise if an accident did occur, the parachute club could end up owning your

But possible litigation takes an immediate back seat when first boarding the plane. Gaining altitude is almost like a drum roll in the stomach until the crescendo - the pilot cuts the engine at 3,000 ft., the jumpmaster pulls open the hatch and screams three commands:

-"Get your feet out the door." (Probably the hardest part.)

"Get all the way out." (Once you're this far, Schmidt said it's a safety hazard to attempt to bring the jumper back in so there is really no turning back.)

-"Dot!" (The jumper is holding on to a wing support and directly above the jumper under the wing is a little orange dot. When the jumpmaster yells "Dot!" it's a sixsecond free fall until a static line, which is hooked to the inside of the plane and the jumper's pack, rips open the parachute, and it's a three- to-five- minute fall home.)

After five to seven jumps the static line is no longer used, Schmidt said.

"You challenge yourself," Bradley said. "You take your biggest fear and you conquer it. It will be the biggest natural high of you

Or, as Gregory explained it, "I think my life savings and GPA are now in the hands of the K-State Parachute Club."

Bob Gregory, senior in finance, holds an arch while waiting for his chute to deploy after letting go of the wing's strut.

Bruce Berggren, senior in mechanical engineering and vice president of the parachute club,

Gallery exhibits art by Pablo Picasso

By The Collegian Staff

Manhattan residents have the opportunity to view and purchase an original work by painter Pablo Picasso until Oct. 20.

"Painter and Model," an etching by the Spanish postimpressionist artist, is part of an exhibit on loan from Christie's Contemporary Arts of New York, London and Tokyo. The work is priced at $5,000 at Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz Ave.

The exhibit, which opened Oct. 6, also displays works by artists Henry Moore, Victor Pasmore, Arthur Secunda, Erte, David Hockney and Joan Miro.

In its fifth year of business, Strecker Gallery, which usually displays the work of local and regional artists, has never housed a Picasso before, said Julie Strecker, gallery owner and Exhibitions are open for viewing from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays.

This month, monoprints by Manhattan resident Mary Palffy are also on exhibition.

A new exhibit will open Oct. 25 and will include watercolors by Richard Forsyth, assistant dean of architecture and design, and James Jones, assistant professor of pre-design professions.

Educators to discuss problems of minorities

By The Collegian Staff

A weekend conference at Washburn University will allow Kansas minority students an opportunity to discuss with educators and community leaders educational and social roadblocks faced by minorities.

The conference, which begins Friday and ends Saturday, is sponsored by the Associated Students of Kansas, Washburn University and the Kansas State Board of Education.

"The conference will give students the opportunity to talk about the concerns minorities face in higher education, society and public education. It will deal with the problems and difficulties minorities deal with when they are placed in in an educational system they are not prepared for or that is not prepared for them," said Curtis Pitts, Washburn student and minority student caucus director of ASK.

Pitts said one of the problems minority students have to face is learning how to understand the unfamiliar phrasing and word usage in textbooks before they can learn

"Textbooks are written with phrases and word choices that are biased against low-income minority homes," Pitts said. "You don't find the word choice you find in a lowincome minority home."

Panel discussions by educators Saturday will follow workshops development.

Anne Butler, director for educational supportive services in the Office of Minority Affairs, will also be a panelist at the conference.

Individuals interested in attending the conference should contact the ASK office in Topeka.

By JANET MATTHIAS

Students in Stanley Ehler's crop science class were surprised by the attention paid to Ehler's recent public statements about his philosophy of teaching.

An article in the Sept. 26 issue of the Collegian, "Godly instruction focus of crop course," drew several responses through letters to the editor.

The article consisted of an interview with Ehler, associate professor of agronomy. In the interview, Ehler defined his objectives for his classes, his philosophies on teaching and learning, where students fit into "God's plan," and his opinions on why women attend college.

The article, particularly Ehler's opinions on women, caused some controversy, mostly concerning Ehler's references to women - "I just believe most of them (female advisees and female students) are here because they are looking for Mr. Right," and "they (female students) are here to do what they are supposed to be doing (finding a husband)."

George Ham, head of the Department of Agronomy, said that action taken toward Ehler is a personnel matter, it is confidential,

'but I do believe I have taken the

But several former and present students of Ehler's crop science class were surprised by these comments, saying very little, if anything, has been said in class about women and their reasons for attending college. More prominent, said one female student, who asked to remain anonymous because she is enrolled in the class, was Ehler's discussion on his philosophies about

"I don't personally feel he (Ehler) has said anything directly about women like he did in the article," she said, "but I was offended by what he said (in the article)."

"If someone had walked in on the first day of class, they would have heard all of the first part of that article," she said.

The part of the article she was referring to concerned Ehler giving his objective for the course; which is "to show them (the students) God's love and God's truths." He also stated the "secret" of his class "is to set the scene, to give the complete picture, to show where the student fits in, where the instuctor fits in."

"We get a lot of his philosophies about God," the female student said. "I don't mind a teacher telling me his philosophies, but I do mind it when a teacher tests over his philosophies. The first three questions on his first test had nothing to do with crop science, they had to do with his philosophies.'

She said an example of a question Ehler asked on the first test was: 'What is the basis for the respect you are to show your teachers here at K-State?" Ehler's answer was, "Your instuctors are filling in for your parents, whose power comes from God."

Other students agreed with her opinion' about Ehler's philosophies.

One male student currently in Ehler's class, said, "The first few days of class, I took over five pages of notes about his philosophies on what makes a good student, freedom, God, reasons for authority and his ideas of submission," he said. "I didn't expect to get a philosophy class when I enrolled in crop science."

This student said Ehler has "fairly interesting lectures" and is a "pretty good teacher." He said he thought it was interesting no students or former students of crop science responded to the article through Another male student also enrolled in Ehler's class said he "blows it (Ehler's philosophies) off as a joke." "Mostly his philosophies are for freshmen, but if they want all of that, they can take a class for it," he said. Diane Green, senior in agriculture economics and a student in Ehler's class said she has no problem with Ehler's philosophies.

"Every teacher has his ideas about what he wants done," Green said. "He (Ehler) says he would like for us to do things his way, but we don't have to." Ehler refused to grant a second interview.

Ross brings experience to role as soccer coach

By JAY KNORR Collegian Reporter

Clay Ross, K-State Soccer Club's coach, although just 30 years old, has been playing and coaching soccer for 19 years.

Born in Ludwigshafen-on-the-Rhine, West Germany, Ross first came to the United States in 1960. His family stayed for two years and then moved back to Germany.

Nine months later he was back in the United States. The moving back and forth continued through high school until Ross graduated from Manhattan High in 1972.

Because he had established residency in Kansas he decided to continue his education at K-State.

He graduated in 1980 with a bachelor's degree in sociology and correctional administration. Since that time he has been counseling at a halfway house and work release center in Topeka.

His ultimate goal is to teach soccer

"I am trying to get into teaching because I enjoy working with kids," Ross said. "I have coached about 25 teams and probably half of those were 8- through 12-year-olds."

Ross' first coaching experience in soccer was in 1975 when he coached children aged 8 to 12 in West Germany.

From 1977-80 Ross was the commissioner of a Manhattan soccer club that included children from junior high through high school. This spring, he took over as the head coach of the soccer club.

"One of the reasons that I'm involved in it is that I have experience in starting programs and I think I can help this program get under way," he said.

"Basically, K-State's always had a player-coach so there was really no position for me to fill into. I could have come in as a player-coach, but I felt that to try and develop the program it wouldn't be as effective if I were acting in that capacity," Ross

He began playing soccer on a serious level in 1970 - his sophomore year in high school. Before that, he played recreational soccer for three years. While serving in the military in Germany, he continued to play

"I got to play with the military soccer team. We traveled and played around Germany, France, Belgium...most of the central European countries," he said.
"The soccer is more competitive there, but the exposure is greater than it is here. There's a larger variety of sports here in the U.S. but soccer, right now, is the fastest growing youth sport in America."

Evidence to back this up is the increasing number of high school varsity soccer programs. There is a requirement that says there must be a certain amount of varsity teams at the high school level before playoffs can be held.

Ross said, "Apparently, from what See ROSS, Page 8

Soccer Club head coach Clay Ross says he believes the club deserves more recognition but realizes it will take patience and hard work to gain it.

Although Ross does not get paid for his coaching, he believes watching the players improve and developing a solid program is personally rewarding.

Royals hope to stay alive in Toronto

Royals third baseman George Brett acknowledges the cheering crowd after hitting his second home run in Friday's game.

By The Associated Press

TORONTO - George Brett does not like the situation his Kansas City Royals are in, but he's seen it so many times that he thinks it might work to their advantage.

'Maybe it's the experience of losing so many playoff games and the only World Series we were in. It could help," Brett said. "No one's p-tight about it.

Once again, the Royals will be facing elimination in the American League playoffs when they go into Game 6 tonight against the Toronto Blue Jays.

Toronto could have wrapped up the best-of-seven series Sunday in Kansas City, but lost 2-0. The Blue Jays now return to familiar Exhibition Stadium and can bring the first World Series to Canada by winning either tonight or Game 7 Wednesday night.

"If we can't win one out of two, we don't deserve to be there," said Toronto's Jesse Barfield, who has six hits and four runs batted in through five games.

"I'm looking forward to practice tomorrow (Monday) to work on some things," he said. "To get some rest Monday night and come back strong Tuesday.

The Blue Jays got eight hits off Danny Jackson in the fifth game, the same number of hits by Kansas City. But Toronto, which hit nearly .300 with runners in scoring position during the regular season and was 11-for-38 in those situations during the playoffs, did not get any timely

"I just want to leave this game in Kansas City and get home. We didn't get the job done," Toronto's Lloyd Moseby said.

So Moseby and his teammates packed up their equipment - and their still-corked champagne - and headed back to Toronto, where they will face surprise starter Mark Gubicza in Game 6.

Gubicza, a starting pitcher the entire season, began the playoffs in the bullpen. He was odd-man-out when Kansas City Manager Dick Howser set up a rotation of lefthanders Charlie Leibrandt, Bud Black and Danny Jackson, along with righty Bret Saberhagen.

But Howser's plans changed Sunday when Jackson started while Black, who was scheduled to pitch Game 6, got ready in the bullpen. "We had decided before the game that if we needed a left-hander, Black would be it," Howser said.

"Everybody was in the bullpen, Bret and everybody," Howser said. "We had to win. It'll probably be the same situation Tuesday night." So, Howser won the game but lost a starting pitcher. It was a trade he did not mind making.

"Gubicza pitched well for us this season, and I don't hesitate going to him," Howser said. "He's one of the reasons we're here.

Gubicza was 14-10, including an August loss to Toronto when he got shelled in his only outing against the Blue Jays.

Club seeks recognition as answer to problems

By JAY KNORR Collegian Reporter

Recognition is something campus sports clubs seldom get, but that's what Head Coach Clay Ross wants for the K-State Soccer Club.

"We're not recognized by the University, as far as a varsity with us with the (Memorial) Stadium intercollegiate sport, but we're also and they're helping us all they can, not an intramural sport," said Ross graduate in elementary education. "Yet, rec services does help us out as much as they can.

'There's a lot of things we'd like to do, and a lot of things we can do, and it hurts me and the players for us not to get the recognition we deserve.'

- Clay Ross

"There's a lot of things we'd like to do, and a lot of things we can do, and it hurts me and the players for us not to get the recognition we deserve."

Still, the matter of utmost importance to Ross is that of recognition. He was told that the University turned down an offer several years ago from a sponsor who offered to pay for a varsity soccer team.

Ross said, "The rationale behind that was that no other Big Eight school has a varsity soccer team ... (But) not every sport in the Big Eight is covered by all eight schools.

"In the long-run, I'm hoping that the University will recognize us. But for now, the soccer club has other areas of concern.

"Right now we have three teams and zero fields, actually," Ross said. "The grounds department and University facilities are working but there are still problems

"If it rains a minimal amount, we have problems using the field, and that causes problems with our scheduling.'

But the problems don't stop there. Sometimes we have to carpool and go somewhere else," he said. "We're practicing on fields that aren't soccer fields, and a lot of times fields that don't have goals or markings. What homefield advantage do we have?"

Ross said the recognition will come with a little patience and a lot of hard work - in short, dedication.

Not only is dedication required in the players but in the coach, too. Ross, who doesn't receive a salary because the University does not sponsor the team, gets his pay in other ways.

"The reward I receive is watching the players improve and developing the program as a personal achievement for myself," he said.

"Between Harold Rathburn, the team manager, and myself, we put in about 60 hours a week. Sometimes I have to remind myself that I'm still a student" - as well as a soccer coach looking for a little recognition.

Smith homers in ninth to give Cards 3-2 win Cardinals right-hander Bob

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS - Ozzie Smith, the least likely man in the St. Louis lineup, homered with one out in the ninth inning to give the Cardinals a 3-2 victory over Los Angeles in the pivotal fifth game of the National League playoffs Monday. With the victory, the Cardinals swept the three games in their home park and took a 3-2 lead as the in the best-ofseven series moves back to Los Angeles.

The homer came on an 0-1 pitch from Tom Niedenfuer and was the first that the switch-hitting Smith has hit batting left-handed in 2,968 career at-bats. He had only six homers this season.

In and out of trouble, Dodger lefthander Fernando Valenzuela finally left after throwing 132 pitches through eight innings, and Niedenfuer, who saved Game 1 for Valenzuela, came in to pitch.

He got Willie McGee to foul out to third and ran the count to a ball and two strikes on Smith before the slightly built shortstop launched one into the second deck in right field.

Tommy Herr gave the Cardinals their only two other runs in the game with a two-run double in the first inning, and Dodger third baseman Bill Madlock evened it up in the fourth.

The winning pitcher was Cardinal bullpen ace Jeff Lahti, the fourth St. Louis pitcher of the day, who retired the Dodgers in order in the ninth.

Reagan's tax overhaul plan hits snag

Congressional budget talks drag on

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan's proposals to overhaul the federal tax code, already moving sluggishly through Congress, may be slowed further by negotiations between the House and Senate over legislation to force a balanced budget.

The bargainers will begin meeting at midweek on the plan adopted last week by the Senate as an amendment to a measure raising the national debt limit to more than $2 trillion.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., said that with an already crowded Senate agenda, the balanced budget talks diminish any chances for tax reform legislation this year.

Dole repeated his criticism of the Treasury Department an emergency $5 billion auction made possible through the Federal Financing Bank — which manages the government's debt - that eased the pressure to increase the government's borrowing authority.

Dole had been counting on the urgency of dealing with the debt limit increase to prompt action on the balanced budget amendment which was attached to it.

"Like Christopher Columbus discovering the wrong continent, the Treasury Department may be just discovering an unwanted consequence of its unprecedented decision to tap into the Federal Financing Bank to finance the deficit," Dole said in a statement.

"By taking the pressure off the House to increase the debt ceiling, Treasury may well doom the tax bill," he added.

Among major items facing the Senate between now and Thanksgiving are trade legislation, the farm bill, appropriations measures, Conrail, child nutrition and other money matters, Dole said.

Leading the unusually large House contingent of 48 will be Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, which is trying to draft the tax overhaul legislation. There will be nine senators participating in the conference aimed at writing a compromise version of the legislation.

Rostenkowski, whose panel also has been occupied with trade legislation, canceled one tax drafting session last week so that he could focus on the budget and

In all, 14 senior members of the House's tax-writing panel will be directly involved in the bargaining, meaning that the longer the talks on the budget proposal, the longer will be the delay.

Lafene conducts study on headache remedies

By BECKY WEBER Collegian Reporter

"Take two aspirin and call me in the morning" is a medical solution which will be scrutinized by Lafene Student Health Center.

Lafene is offering $25 and a travel alarm clock to any student who agrees to participate in a headache study being conducted by Quincy Laboratories of Kansas City, Mo.

Dr. Daniel Martin, a physician at Lafene, was contacted by Quincy Laboratories to do the study. Early in his career, nearly 15 years ago, Martin worked in clinical pharmacology at Quincy Laboratories.

Any student with the desire to participate in the study must have routine tension headaches.

Dreeanna Hood, registered nurse and clinic supervisor at Lafene, will screen candidates. The only lab work done for the study is a pregnancy test given to women of child-bearing age.

After screening, the student will be given a packet of pills with instructions to take them when a headache occurs. A diary must be kept for the next six hours, with reports every 30 minutes for the first be turned in to Martin or Hood at Lafene. One of three drugs will be given to the student: Ibuprofen, the medicine contained in pain relievers such as Advil or Motrin; Acetamenophen, which is contained in Tylenol; and Anacin 3, a placebo.

Martin said the test is "doubleblind" in that, "I don't know what I am giving the patient and he doesn't know what he is taking."

Martin will review the results of the participants and turn them in to Quincy Laboratories. The studies will be used to determine the effectiveness of the two drugs being tested.

No Lafene doctor is being paid for participating in the study. Instead, Lafene will receive a flexible sigmoidoscope, an instrument used to view the colon, Martin said.

The project will continue until 100 students have participated, Martin said. Eight students have been tested so far. About 1,200 students from four colleges and universities will be tested.

"Personally, I'd like to have my mind stimulated and refreshed, to see how they (Quincy Laboratories) review the results and see the changes that have happened since I have worked in pharmacology," categories," Rintoul said. "It won't do what it says it's going to do...it will at the same time channel funds away from more important areas."

Another concern stated in the petition is: "SDI funding, more so than other sources of funding, is likely to blur the distinction between classified and unclassified research and lead to restrictions of academic freedom at Kansas State University. SDI officials openly concede that any successful unclassified project may become classified."

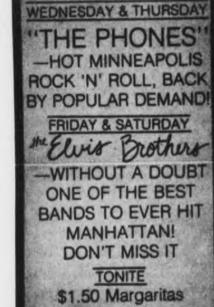

Not all academians, however, are against SDI research.

Officials from the physics department at the University of Kansas report they are currently working on computer simulation research which is funded by a $60,000 SDI grant. Also, Science Digest reports "150 or so university faculty members...have already accepted some 'Star Wars' funding."

Thomas Armstrong, professor of physics at KU, said he has heard of the petitions against SDI but has not seen any circulating at that university.

"Everyone has their own view of the world," Armstrong said. "I happen to believe there is no damage to national security in what we are doing. It's a good research and educational opportunity. I don't see it as a threat to world peace."

Presidential committee begins deliberations

Forum allows individuals to provide input

By SARAH KESSINGER Collegian Reporter

A strong leader, communicator, administrator, businessperson, and someone with a strong academic background were the main desired characterisitcs of a new University president expressed at an open forum Tuesday in the Union Council Chamber.

Committee Chairman Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology, moderated the forum, sponsored by the Presidential Search Committee. Approximately 60 people

The forum consisted of half-hour sessions for classified employees, students, faculty and one open to all to voice suggestions on what the committee should look for in possible

Among those voicing opinions for the 1900 classified employees was Connie Noble, an accountant in the University controllor's office. Noble said she would like to see a president who is sensitive to the needs of the classified employees.

Rita Newell, accountant clerk in the chemistry department, agreed with Noble.

"Basically we would like to see someone chosen by the search committee who is an educator, who is an administrator and most importantly a communicator.

"We do have something valuable to contribute. Classified employees are in a very good position to offer suggestions to how it (the university) could be run more efficiently, Newell said.

Catherine Sayler, non-degree graduate, addressed the fact that only five students attended the forum. "I think part of the reason is that students don't feel like they're being heard," Sayler said. She cited examples such as the proposal to raze Nichols Gymnasium, the Fred Bramlage Coliseum issue concerning market studies and the plan to put in a parking lot near McCain Auditorium, all of which spurred student protest.

"I think those are three very good examples by which you can look at students' perspective where, in order for them to be heard often, they have to be very vocal, and they have to be very negative about the situation, which is very unfortunate," Sayler

Sayler suggested that a committee member could address the student

Committee discusses attributes of successor

By TIM CARPENTER

Editor The 15-member Presidential

Search Committee met Tuesday to discuss the best method of gathering a "pool of applicants" and begin the process of finding a replacement for President Duane Acker.

Discussion during the two-hour meeting centered on the type of leader Acker's successor must be and what the needs of a comprehensive land-grant institution are.

The consensus of the committee is that the next president must be a "turn-around leader" who accentuates the academic side of the school and can aggressively look for opportunities to alter the direction of the University.

While expressing his admiration for Acker, Charles Reagan, pro-

Senate president, said the University needs new leadership because it has been hit with "a string of bad news some of it associated with the president's office - declining enrollment, the firing of a coach and the coliseum.'

Reagan was referring to the University's damaged public image following the recent firing of football Coach Jim Dickey and problems that led to seating reductions and a sixmonth construction delay of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

"We need a leader with a positive image so that the news coming out of K-State is positive," he said.

The committee will begin screening applicants Dec. 1, and must submit a list of three to five candidates to the Board of Regents by April 1. The regents will then make the final fessor in philosophy and Faculty selection. Acker, in his 11th year as K-State president, will make his resignation official June 30, 1986.

Randolph Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration, outlined for the committee the qualities he is looking for in the new

He said the future president should have a high degree of academic integrity, be an articulate spokesperson for higher education, have administrative experience, possess charisma and have an understanding of the land-grant tradition.

Stanley Koplik, executive director for the regents, told the committee as many as 120 university presidents, administrators and representatives of post-secondary education from top institutions in the United States will

Authorities seek arrest of pirates

By The Associated Press

GENOA, Italy - Investigators issued arrest warrants Tuesday for two more Palestinians, bringing to seven the number of people charged in the hijacking of the Achille Lauro during a Mediterranean cruise that began in this northern port Oct. 3.

Gennaro Calabrese de Feo, chief prosecutor of Genoa, would not identify the two Palestinians, reveal the charges against them, or say if they were in custody.

Italian news agencies said one was aboard the Italian cruise liner and left it in Alexandria, Egypt, the last stop before the hijacking. They said the second bought the cruise tickets in Genoa that the four pirates used.

Judicial sources said at least one accomplice in Genoa helped the four hijackers. The sources, who spoke on the condition they were not identified, quoted the accused pirates as telling interrogators that explosives and submachine guns were put in their cabin before they boarded.

An American passenger was killed during the hijacking.

According to Italian news media, the four men charged with hijacking the Achille Lauro on Oct. 7 have been moved from Sicily to a prison in Spoleto, in the Umbrian hills 80 miles north of Rome.

Spoleto, where the performing arts Festival of Two Worlds is held each summer, also has a maximum security prison where many Italian terrorists have been held.

The four men were taken by armed convoy from Siracusa's 16th-century prison to an undisclosed location Monday and there was no official confirmation they had gone to Spoleto.

Officials confront numerous questions

University begins forming AIDS policy

By CONRAD EASTERDAY Staff Writer

University officials across the nation are becoming aware that Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome has reached college campuses. But while only a few cases have appeared since 1983, the controversy and fear surrounding the disease has caused those officials to begin forming policies concerning AIDS.

The questions facing university administrators are numerous. Should students with the disease be allowed to live in residence halls, play varsity sports or work in food services? Should faculty with AIDS be allowed to teach? Should high school seniors with AIDS be admitted to the universities? What steps should universities take to ensure the confidentiality of AIDS victims on campus?

No policy yet exists at K-State, said Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for educational and student services, but discussion of a policy to educate students, faculty and staff should begin soon at some level within the University.

Major responsibility for formulating such a policy would fall on Director of Student Health Robert Tout, Bosco said.

Tout said even though there have been two reported cases in Manhattan - one a former faculty member no one on or off campus should be fearful of exposure to AIDS. The Wichita-Eagle Beacon recently reported that Joel Justesen, assistant professor of speech, acquired AIDS in 1983 three months after he came to K-State. Justesen left the University because his contract was not renewed. Justesen said his gay friends have been the least understanding about his battle with AIDS.

"I think my gay friends see themselves in me. My heterosexual friends have been extremely supportive," he said in the Eagle-Beacon article. Justesen now lives in Topeka and is a board member of the Kansas AIDS Network. Dealing with AIDS objectively should be the basis of any attempt to develop a policy on students with the disease, Tout said.

"There's a lot of hysteria out there. But I think we know enough about AIDS that it shouldn't be such a frightening topic. I think we know enough that we shouldn't deny admission to someone with AIDS," Tout said.

"If we had a student on campus who had AIDS and happened to be sharing the classroom with my son or daughter I would see no hazard,"

The only known methods of contracting AIDS are through sexual contact or contact with the blood of a person who has been exposed to the disease, Tout said.

AIDS attacks the immune system of the body, leaving it vulnerable to infection. The incurable disease, found predominantly in major urban areas among homosexual men, has been spreading to the general population and to smaller cities.

If asked to recommend a policy for the University now, Tout said he would propose that students with AIDS should be restricted only from working at food service jobs and playing contact sports. If someone were to discover a person with AIDS working on one of the University food lines, Tout said,

Kansas may be known for its tornadoes, but not for its earth-

A study conducted in December 1977 by the Kansas Geological Survey in Lawrence showed earthquakes do occur in Kansas. Over a period of seven years, eight micro-earthquakes were recorded near a fault in the spillway at Tuttle Creek Reser-

"Many of these microearthquakes were discovered near a fault that runs through Tuttle Creek spillway, but were so small they could only be detected by a seismograph specially designed to pick up microearthquakes."

A seismograph is an apparatus used to measure movement in the The fault was discovered before Tuttle Creek Reservoir was built in 1962. A displacement was noticed in the layers of rock above the spillway. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers studies indicated no earthquake threat would be posed if the dam were built over it.

"The fault is very existent and a little disturbing," Underwood said. "It is a nagging concern. If MANAGUA, Nicaragua - The Sandinista government issued a decree Tuesday night suspending civil rights because "the brutal agression by North America and its internal allies has created an extraordinary situation."

Among the rights suspended were free expression, public assembly, strikes and the privacy of postal comunications.

The decree, signed by President Daniel Ortega, was read over national radio and television.

Most of those rights and guarantees had been suspended when a state of emergency was declared in March 1982, but they were restored shortly before the national elections last November.

The new decree also strengthened news censorhsip, with all sections of the media required to submit, prior to publication or broadcast, their material to the Interior Ministry's director of communications.

MIT economist wins 1985 Nobel Prize

By The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden - Franco Modigliani, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor, won the 1985 Nobel Prize in economics Tuesday for theories he developed 30 years ago on personal savings and the value of businesses.

"I am obviously very pleased," the 67-year-old economist said at his home in Belmont, Mass. "It's always nice to hear that the work I've done is appreciated and regarded as important."

Modigliani, who emigrated from his native Italy to the United States at the beginning of World War II, was cited for theories on how people save for their old age and for refining economic thinking on how to determine the market value of businesses.

Tuesday's award marked the 13th time in the 17 years of the prize that it was won or shared by an American.

Professor Assar Lindbeck, a member of the Swedish prize jury, said after the announcement that Modigliani's work "is not explaining

The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences, which made the award, said Modigliani developed a lifecycle hypothesis of household saving and formulated theorems used to value firms and capital costs.

Modigliani's savings theories, worked out in the 1950s with a student, the late Richard Brumberg, helped demonstrate how people reduced their savings when they could count on improved pensions.

He said Tuesday that he leaves decisions about household finances to his wife, Serena. As he expressed it: "I give the general ideas, and my wife makes better specific Lindbeck said work by Modigliani and Miller showed that "a company manager should not maximize annual profits but maximize the value of shares on the stock market."

Their theory also showed, he said, that "a company with a large debt is as valuable as a company with a smaller debt if their future profits are as big."

The academy said that in the field individual economics, Modigliani's thinking was now "the basis of most dynamic models" used to study consumption and saving.

Lindbeck pointed to lower personal savings in heavily pensioned Sweden as the type of field where Modigliani's savings ideas were applied. Swedes saved 6 to 7 percent of their incomes 25 years ago, he said, but now save virtually nothing because of increased pensions.

Modigliani's partners in developing the theories did not share in the prize, Lindbeck said, because the greater overall contribution was his.

The economist was born in Rome in 1918 and earned a doctorate in jurisprudence at the University of Rome in 1939, a year before he and his wife fled to the United States to escape the fascist regime of Benito Mussolini.

Two of the most influential postwar American economic theorists, Paul Samuelson and Milton Friedman, won the Nobel economics prize in 1970 and 1976 respectively.

The academy said Modigliani and Friedman differed in their theories of how people saved, with Friedman arguing that people saved both for themselves and their descendants and Modigliani contending they saved only for themselves.

spark discussion at student center

By JAMIE MCPHETER Collegian Reporter

Women's concern about their "second-class citizenship" in society and church activities has become the central discussion for meetings at the Catholic Student Center this semester.

Not being allowed to run in church office elections and not being allowed to be ordained in the Roman Catholic Church are the main issues.

The impetus for the meetings is a new pastoral letter, "Women in Society and the Church," being written by six Roman Catholic bishops, said Sister Betty Suther, campus minister at the center. The bishops were selected for a committee to represent all bishops in the United States, Suther said. A pastoral letter is a literary work dealing with the problems and concerns of people.

Women on campus are being given the opportunity to voice opinions about the letter in a series of discussion meetings to begin in late October, Suther said. Women who attend the meetings will break up into small groups and discuss six questions prepared by the committee of bishops, chaired by Bishop Joseph Imesch of Joliet, Ill.

"The meetings (on campus) will begin as soon as I can set up times and dates and work out any minor details. There will be three or four meetings before Christmas and at least three after (the holiday). The meetings will end before March 1 because this is when I need to send in all the data to nationals," Suther said.

Six discussion questions will be based three on topics, "Women Speaking out in Church," "Who am I, Who are We?" and "Image of Women in the Church.'

After the women have discussed their answers in small groups, they will mail the answers they tally to Imesch who will then send the answers to the headquarters in Illinois.

Suther said the major concern for women of the Catholic Church is the isolation of women's problems in the topics of the pastoral.

Representatives of some women's organizations, including the National Right to Life committee, the Institute for Religious Life and the Ladies Auxilary of the Knights, have told the bishops they do not want a letter based on women because it makes it look like women are the problem. What the women at St. Isidore's want is a letter on the problems women face within the church, Suther said.

Suther said she believes a pastoral on sexism would benefit the church. If such a pastoral was written, men and women would be working together.

The meetings concerning women's issues will be open to the public and dates, times and places will be advertised.

MILWAUKEE - President Reagan cautioned Congress on Tuesday against attempts to scuttle an administration-backed budgetbalancing plan, warning that "the American people are watching."

In speeches prepared for a Republican fund-raising event here and delivered earlier in Boise, Idaho, Reagan said the Democrat-led House "took a step in the right direction" Friday by passing its version of the budgetary measure that already had been approved by the Republican-controlled Senate.

Union's stand nauseating

The firing of an employee of a Minnesota trucking company for taking a stand against smoking has been appropriately reversed by union officials.

The truck driver, Edward Dunn of Bayfield, Wis., was fired by Monson Trucking, Inc., of Duluth, Minn., for refusing to travel with a co-worker who smokes. Dunn possessed written documentation from a doctor stating that smoke causes him eye irritation, nausea and headaches.

The company fired Dunn because the contract states an employee who refuses a load is considered to have resigned.

Dunn was reinstated after an arbitrator between North Central Independent Drivers Union and Monson Trucking ruled the discharge violated a union con-

Congratulations to Dunn and congratulations to the union for backing him in his refusal to work in an environment unacceptable to his system - especially when that environment was corrupted by a disgusting and unnecessary habit.

The smoking driver had every right to smoke and cause potential danger to his own health, but upon Dunn was inexcuseable and should not have been condoned by the trucking company. Worse yet, the company not only condoned the action of the smoking individual, but went so far as to fire Dunn for demanding his right to protect his health.

The reinstatement of Dunn to his job should set a precedent for all companies and unions. Companies should protect employees' health in all matters, even when the concern is breatheable air free from cigarette smoke. If company contracts or policies are violated by an individual who is trying to protect his health, the company has the responsibility to overrule the policy.

Smoking is a health matter which should be taken seriously by all individuals. Perhaps the trucking company is not the only party responsible for protecting the employees' health. Employees should also take responsibility for their actions and be considerate of their peers'

It's a pretty callous person who would allow a fellow employee to be fired just so he or she can enjoy a cigarette. It can't be stressed enough that they can smoke all they want in their own home and it's their own business, but to imto impose the carcinogenic air pose on co-workers is deplorable.

Novels capture essence of nuclear peril

In general, I am a fairly easy-going sort, not given to fretting about impending doom. However, I've spent the last few months thinking about the end of the world. I have a large collection of books, and among them, morbid as it may seem, is a selection of six or seven "end of the world" stories.

The titles to which I refer are both bestsellers and unknowns: "Warday," by Whitley Strieber and James Kunetka; "The Long Voyage Back," by Luke Rhinehart; "Alas, Babylon," by Pat Frank; "Trinity's Child," by Willaim Prochnau; "Lucifer's Hammer," by Larry Niven and Jerry Pournelle; "The Stand," by Stephen King; and "Down to a Sunless Sea," by David Graham. I must reluctantly confess that I enjoy reading these novels of ultimate destruc-

Of the seven, five close the curtain on this world with a nuclear bang, one with a manmade plague and one with a comet. Each offers a bleak prospect of the future.

"Warday," far and away the cheeriest of the five nuke novels, posits a war that "lasted 36 minutes and devastated the world," according to the cover. Only three U.S. cities are bombed: Washington, D.C., New York City and San Antonio, Texas. Additionally, the Minuteman and MX fields in the north central states are liberally sprayed with "nudets" (nuclear detonations, in the gee-whiz jargon of the subject).

This little war, which, I remind you, lasts all of 36 minutes, kills some 10 million outright. The resultant panic, famine, radiation and economic collapse kills some 40 million more in the five years the book spans.

"Warday" is the best and most readable of the doomsday novels, and it presents a petrifying account of the result of what is in nuclear terms a water-pistol war. It manages to frighten even complacent old famine, the utter collapse of Americana and the way America is viewed by nations unscathed by the war, would scare most anyone. (Britain becomes the mirror image of the United States in World War II, with "British Relief" the main source of food, medicine and administration in devastated

In one haunting section, a Canadian banker refers to the "Uncle Sam jump" during a conversation with two Americans much as "ugly Americans" joke blithely about "Montezuma's Revenge" to Latins today. It might pop some pompous American balloons to think we could require the aid of Japan, the United Kingdom and Canada to rebuild our republic.

The point is this: I, a confirmed moderate, find that the prospect of nuclear war scares me so badly I have begun to look seriously at arguments to "ban the bomb."

I have not yet decided whether or not I want to ban the bomb. I am afraid of the consequences of nuclear war, so much so that I would much prefer to be crisped in the first milliseconds than to die horribly later on - a survivor type I ain't. But do I think that the risks of war outweigh the dangers of an openly antagonistic superpower? I don't know...how can I know?

What, then, does the moderate political animal do? How does he or she handle the fear and the horror? Often in unproductive ways, by mumbling lip service to SALT treaties and silently hoping for some sort of divine intervention that will: 1) end the arms race and 2) end it so America winds up on top. But what productive ways exist for political moderates to see to it that future generations do not wind up wondering what canned food was and scrabbling like medieval peasants for their next mouthful?

There has been a change in the way strategists approach nuclear war. In the past, the policy of Mutual Assured Destruction was uppermost in military minds: Mess with us and you're dead meat, comrade.

But nowadays, there is a growing conviction that the Big Hot One is inevitable, and scientists are scrambling madly to discover ways to keep it from being the Absolute Dead Last One. By looking at a war as fightable, not to mention winnable, we have taken a major step toward a world where our kids are their own nightlights.

I am afraid of the Bomb. I remember the Donald Fagen (formerly of Steely Dan) song and video "IGY (What A Beautiful World This Will Be)" that contrasts syrupy, optimistic lyrics about all the great things we thought would happen in the '70s and '80s with cartoon figures hiding in their pre-fab bomb shelter after the sirens go off for the last time. Those images stay with me.

I'll tell you something else: When the sirens blow in town or on campus, whether it's a test or a tornado... I listen for the wavering tone that says the missiles are away, not the long tone that says it's a tornado warning. I think it's going to happen. One of these days, the sirens will go off for real, and then there will be nothing we can do about it.

The Strategic Air Command motto "Peace Is Our Profession" - offers some hope, if you believe in Mutual Assured Destruction. But when SAC rushes out to the B-52s and the F-111s for the last time, they will have already lost the war.

By fighting it.

Dictionary's value clear

In 1828 a literary work was completed which took more than 20 years to compile and contained 70,000 entries - 12,000 of them never before published. Its title was "An American Dictionary of the English Language," its author, Noah Webster.

Webster, born this day in 1758, often claimed he would "singlehandedly standardize American speech." As he continued in life, though, he found his dictionary needed frequent revisions, occupying his time until his death in 1843. He eventually learned to accept that language can be described and somewhat influenced, but it cannot be controlled.

Webster's work as a lexicographer and writer was instrumental in standardizing spelling and pronuncination, as well as distinguishing American English from British English. His dictionary includes many words derived from Indian and American immigrant languages, and did much to bring together a diverse group of Americans by standardizing our most powerful means of communication - a common language.

U.S. must make an effort to cut deficit

With the many issues facing the United States, the one that I believe is the most crucial is the national debt, which has reached incomprehensible proportions. The amount is nearing $2 trillion. That's a two followed by 12 zeros. It's nearly impossible to comprehend that amount and, to be perfectly honest, it really doesn't seem like that much money the way newscasters spit the amount out during broadcasts. How much is $2 trillion? With two trillion $1 bills you could stretch a trail from the sun and back. That's more than 186 million miles. Still hard to comprehend? In order to spend $2 trillion an individual could spend $1,900 per minute for 2,000 years.

So how does this debt affect us? After all, our dollar is strong internationaly, gold prices are down, the stock market is doing fairly well and we have seen higher interest

The key here rests with economic prospects. With the federal government absorbing nearly 30 percent of all the capital raised in the country, something is bound to snap.

Economists have presented theories of economic slow down resulting from such a horrendous debt. Expansion of businesses has been affected due to the lack of available capital. Too much money is being sucked up by the federal government in order to feed the national debt, money that could supplement growing industries.

With such a shortage of capital one can expect interest rates to increase. High interest rates simply add another burden to economic growth. We only need to look back to the Carter administration to see how high interest rates affected nearly every aspect of our economy adversly, from real estate to new car purchases to unemployment rates.

If the Federal Reserve steps in and increases the money supply in order to keep in-terest rates in check, then we can all look for rapid inflation. Some forecasts have shown price increases as high as 10 percent per year in the mid 1990s if the flow of the national debt is not quickly turned back. We must also realize the United States' growing dependency on foreign investors. Already, roughly 11 percent of the national debt is held by foreign investors. Try to tell me this won't affect foreign relations in years to come!

It would be one thing if the numbers in the debt were the only expenses we needed to worry about covering, but there are many other hidden costs acquired along with our deficit. One is interest expenses. Interest costs in repayment of the debt will be more than $138 billion for next year alone, possibly more if interest rates were to increase! At the current pace, it's only a matter of time before the interest payments on the debt equal the debt itself.

Who takes care of this debt? Of course, a little pocket of bureaucracy has been created, appropriately titled The Bureau of the Public Debt. The Bureau of the Public Debt employs 2,400 people at an annual cost to taxpayers of $200 million.

What is being done about the debt on Capital Hill? Quite frankly, not much. The token attempts to address the debt have yet to overcome petty party politics and politicians' pet projects. Seeing how my con-gressman has done little to curb the deficit, I've taken it upon myself to devise a plan to chop away at the national debt bit by bit.

The causes of the national debt are the continuous budgets being passed by Congress that have been drowning in red ink. I would propose a straight, across the board 15 percent cut in all government spending on top of a black ink budget until the debt was brought under control. No ifs, ands or buts.

This would include a freeze in salary raises and cost of living increases. Deficit budgets should be outlawed.

Once we made the budget somewhat more manageable I would like to see revenue projects devised with all receipts from those projects channeled toward eliminating the national debt. Unlike the liberal establishment currently residing in the House of Representatives, which is interested in taxing the American dream and productivity, i.e., proposed increased income tax rates and capital gains tax rates, I would favor continued increased excise taxes on purely luxury items such as tobacco and alcoholic goods. Another theory of mine is the taxing of jewelry. Placing a 10 percent tax on earrings, necklaces, bracelets and rings could hardly be called taxing a necessity.

By taxing these items we would hardly be placing an unnecessary burden on any area of society. Who can list positive contributions to society that tobbacco, alcohol and jewelry have made?

I apologize if I appear somewhat idealistic but I feel the whole key to tackling the national debt problem is to take a firm stand on the issue and back it up with some meaningful action. True, sacrifice will be required, but it will be next to nothing in comparison to the consequences we might face if we continue to let the national debt race on uncontrolled.

Reagan's weapon dreams

the day when the United States is under pressure to be fiscally can be "protected" by "a high frontier" space-based missile defense system called "Star Wars."

The appeal of a remote defense system, which Reagan believes will make nuclear weapons obsolete, cannot be denied. If it works, the plan could remove the threat of a missle exchange. Yet some researchers do not put as much faith in the system as Reagan does.

Alvin Compaan, professor of physics, and Talat Rahman, assistant professor of physics, drafted a petition pledging oppostion to K-State participation in Star Wars research. The petition - presently circulating among faculty in at least six departments - is a valid attempt to raise public consciousness about the political and technological faults of the system. The efforts of the faculty should not be misinterpreted as being anti-

Experts predict the cost of deploying enough lasers to be effective may cost the government $300 billion by the end of the century. Despite the costs, the Star Wars system represents the worst formula for peace because it destabilizes deterrence and has a negative influence on our strategic thinking. It is an illusion to think we can render nuclear weapons obsolete simply by spending billions of dollars. The ultimate danger is that it could make our leaders careless with regard to all other strategic readiness issues. It is one thing to protect selected military targets. It is quite something else to protect the country when the enemy need only get a small number of its missiles through the defense system.

A Star Wars system is not a dream - it is a nightmare.

Slattery's farm amendment fails by 28

By VICKI REYNOLDS Government Editor

An amendment which would have targeted higher deficiency payments to middle- and small-sized farms and established a marketing loan program for farmers fell 28 votes short of approval in the House of Representatives last week.

Jim Slattery, D-Kan., was a cosponsor of the amendment to the 1985 Farm Bill currently being discussed in Congress.

Under the marketing loan program, farmers would have to repay price support loans, but repayment would be allowed at current market prices at the time of repayment. This concept would protect farm income while making U.S. products more competitive in the world market and reducing government surpluses, Slattery said.

Although this particular amendment failed in the House, Slattery said it could still be included in the final bill agreed upon by the House and Senate.

Howard Moses, legislative assistant in Slattery's office, said Slattery has been in contact with the Senate offices about the amendment and will meet with the office of Senator David Boren, D-Okla., this week to discuss the legislation.

Moses said the Senate bill will be worded almost the same as the Kansas Delegation's original amendment except the Senate committee's version includes lower loan rates and target prices.

A provision of the original House bill allowing farmers to decide, through a referendum, whether to adopt a new program for wheat and feed grains was deleted.

"I was particularly disappointed by this decision," Slattery said. Farmers should have the opportunity to decide the direction of agricultural policy."

Slattery said the Kansas delegation was more successful in establishing new conservation programs to stem soil erosion and lessen overproduction. The program would establish a sodbuster program and a

Moses said the sodbuster provision applies if the land was not cultivated between 1981 and 1985 and was classified as fragile or marginal. Under the new provision, a farmer will not be able to "break out" this land and re-seed it for crop benefits.

conservation reserve program.

"The last few years farmers have done this in order to take advantage of the farm program," Moses said. Moses said land classified as fragile and cultivated between 1981 and 1985 must come into full compliance with conservation programs

The conservation program, Moses said, would pay farmers to take marginal land out of production on a 10-year basis in order to put it into grass, trees or some other conservation practice.

The marginal land definition is based on a soil stability classification system, Moses said. Soils classed 4E, 5E, 6, 7, and 8 are fragile soils. Any land eroding at twice the acceptable level can also be included in this definition, Moses said.

Moses said limits for the conservation program are: the land must be defined as fragile; farmers may be paid no more than $50,000 per year for the program; and no more than 25 percent of a county's cropland can be put into reserve. The second district, which includes Manhattan, has a little less than 24 percent in reserve, Moses said.

Slattery said he is not sure how he will vote on the final farm bill, although "as the bill stands at this point, it offers farmers more than the White House proposed earlier this

Supreme Court to decide pretrial hearing case tions for use in tribal ceremonies.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court said Tuesday it will decide whether the public and news media have a right to attend pretrial hearings, the decisive stage in nine out of 10 criminal prosecutions.

The court thus agreed to settle a question left unanswered by two of its rulings since 1980 that granted the press and public the right to be present at criminal trials and at jury selection proceedings.

In the latest case, news agencies challenged their exclusion from a 41-day pretrial hearing for a California nurse, Robert Rubane Diaz, who later was convicted of killing 12 hospital patients.

In other developments Tuesday,

The third annual Chester E. Peters Lecture in Student Development will be given by Harold L. Hodgkinson at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday in Union Forum Hall.

Hodgkinson, a senior fellow at the Institute for Educational Leadership in Washington, D.C., will be speaking on "Demographic Imperatives for Kansas."

The lecture series presents scholars each year in a format that engages the academic community, general public, students and professionals. The first lecture was given in 1983 by K. Patricia Cross, a senior University Graduate School of Education. Last year's lecture was delivered by Alexander W. Astin, director of the UCLA Higher Education Research Institute.

"The purpose of the series is to bring nationally recognized speakers who will address topics that have to do with education," said John D. Steffen, head of the Department of Administration and Foundations of Education and steering committee member of the lecture series.

The title of Hodgkinson's speech coincides with his research about education, mainly post-secondary education. His remarks will come from a monograph, an article about lecturer on education at Harvard a particular subject, he has written called "All One System," Steffen said.

> "The point of his monograph is that from elementary schools to graduate schools is all one system. If we look at it as all one system then there are some important imperatives for what we in postsecondary education think about the future," Steffen said.

> Hodgkinson, who served on the study group on the Conditions of Excellence in American Higher Education, was named director of the National Institute of Education by President Gerald Ford in 1975, was project director in the Center for the Study of Higher Education at the University of California, Berkeley, dean of the College of Education at Bard College in Annandale-on-Hudson in New York and a professor and dean of education at Simmons College in Boston.

Hodgkinson received his undergraduate degree from the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis, his masters from Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., and his doctorate from Harvard in Cambridge, Mass.

Tankers use chemicals to combat fires

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - Air tankers bombed wildfires with chemicals in Southern California on Tuesday as firefighters fought flames that had burned at least 20,000 acres and 14 houses

As hot and dry Santa Ana winds lowered the humidity to 10 percent, turning parched brushland into a firefighters' nightmare for a second day, airplanes laden with firesnuffing chemicals targeted two blazes roaring near Malibu.

"We had the fire burning right up to the walls of the (Malibu) sheriff's office" Tuesday morning, said Los Angeles County sheriff's Sgt. Ronald Wallach. "It was like being within from the coast west of Los Angeles to San Bernardino County.

The Piuma Canyon blaze burned an estimated 3,300 acres, destroying its sixth house and blackening the earth for two miles around the Malibu civic center, 30 miles west of downtown Los Angeles, Wallach said.

A second fire that broke out in nearby Decker Canyon had burned across 5,800 acres by Tuesday morning, but no structures were threatened, said county fire Capt. Gordon Pearson. It had burned four houses and a garage Monday.

Authorities suspected a firebug was at work.

"Arson is always suspected in fires like these," Pearson said, adding it Eight air tankers began dumping chemicals just after dawn on the Piuma and Decker Canyon fires, as fire officials hoped to gain an upper hand. Pearson was cautiously optimistic Tuesday afternoon.

A new concept in business: Runyon Plaza

Runyon Plaza, to be built at the corner of Fifth and Leavenworth streets, was a project developed by Ludwig Villasi, assistant professor of clothing textiles and interior design.

By JOHN WALKER JR. Collegian Reporter

A new concept in the construction of commercial structures is being explored for downtown Manhattan.

Runyon Plaza, to be located at the southeast corner of the intersection of Fifth and Leavenworth streets, is being designed to provide a new concept to the Manhattan community for commercial and professional space combined with residential units.

The project is named in honor of Americ author and journalist Damon Runyon, who was born in a house at the corner of Fourth and Osage streets.

The project developer is Ludwig Villasi, K-State assistant professor of clothing textiles and interior design. Villasi also currently owns the apartment house on the site.

"This is unique to Manhattan," said William Fogerson of Diversified Realty Services, 1430 Poyntz Ave., who is serving as the project's marketing director. "There is a big need for people such as doctors, lawyers, small-business (owners) and professionals in general where ownership is better than renting an office space," Fogerson said. Fogerson said the opportunity to build equity into something, rather than taking rent money and pouring it down the drain, as well as tax advantages, are benefits in private ownership. He said in the past there has been no facility in Manhattan with this type of concept, called a "cooperative," which is similar to a condominium in the fact different parties own separate sections of a common struc-

The main difference between a "cooperative" and the condominium concept, Fogerson said, is the cooperative's better use for commercial offices, as opposed to the condominium concept toward

With the cooperative approach, all structure occupants have stock, determined by the amount of floor space they use, in the corporation owning the building instead of having a deed to their own space.

Fogerson said this type of corporationownership allows the same tax advantages a person would have by owning their own, self-standing building The proposed Plaza will be approximately 98 feet wide by 96 feet long, with three floors on the west and four floors on the east.

Current plans call for office and/or retail sales space on the first floor, professional service offices on the second and third floors with penthouse apartments on the fourth

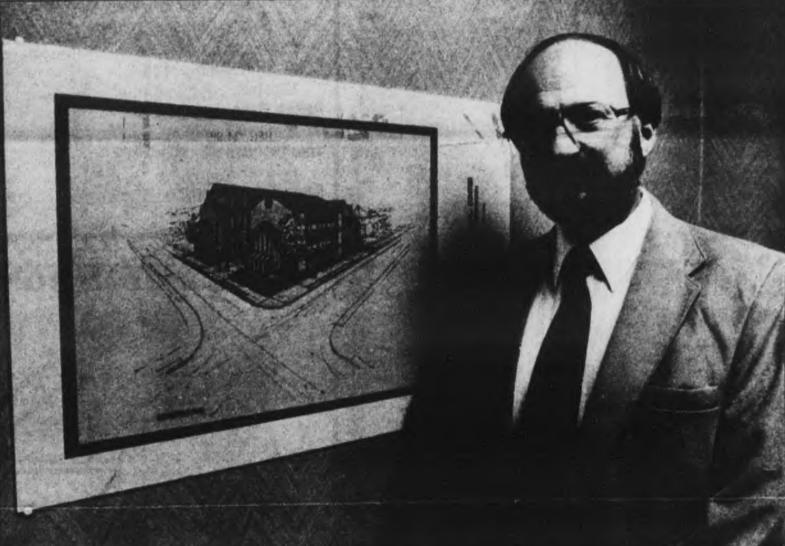

"The world seems to be full of young, divorced professionals that can afford a penthouse apartment that would just love to have one," Fogerson said.

Fogerson also said there are financially secure, retired couples "who would love to be located near the center of everything in a penthouse apartment and have the luxury to go along with that." "This building can be designed as it goes up to accommodate the kind of spaces that an individual person needs," Fogerson said.

The plaza, which Fogerson would be comparable in size to the Riley County Administrative Building, one block south of the structure's site, will cost more than $1.4

Fogerson said construction will begin only after 50 percent of the structure has been committed to by investors.

William Fogerson, director of marketing for the Runyon Plaza, stands next to the drawing of the proposed plaza.

MIT professor tells of friendship

By The Associated Press

BELMONT, Mass. - The newest Nobel laureate in economics paid tribute Tuesday to a student who died in 1951 after helping lay the groundwork for theories on why people and nations save money "He was a very, very dear friend and a great collaborator," Franco Modigliani, professor of economics and finance at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said of Richard Brumberg, a graduate student who wrote two papers with him on

Just before the publication of the second paper, Brumberg died of a brain tumor. He was 25.

"It was a great personal tragedy," Modigliani, 67, said at his comfortable home in the Boston suburbs, where he was up early fixing his breakfast of rye toast and coffee.

It is Modigliani's deep feeling for colleagues such as Brumberg and his work that has made him so popular a theorist and professor, students say.

"He gets insulted if you're working on something interesting and you don't come and talk to him about it," said Jim Kahn, a graduate student in the Sloan School of Management, where Modigliani has taught since 1962.

The professor told reporters at a news conference Tuesday that his theories were colored by a revelation he had while working at a savings bank as a young man. He found, he said, that the bank salted away money when times were good and therefore "had it when you needed it most."

His theory on personal savings - that people at all levels of society tend to save money during good times as they look toward retirement - went against the thought of the day. "The generally accepted view was that saving was something done by rich people," he said.

A later theory on corporate finance developed with Merton Miller, now of the University of Chicago - also debunked economic myth. "The common wisdom was that if a firm needs capital it gets it through equity or borrowing...We found that except for taxes, it makes no difference how a firm is financed," he said.

The fundamentals he laid out in the 1950s have changed little over the years, although saving habits have changed with the introduction of Social Security and pension plans, Modigliani said.

The Reagan administration does not seem to understand why people save and how dangerous the nation's deficit is, he added. "The growing deficit is a disastrous policy which is going to be very, very destructive to you people who are young,' he told reporters.

Modigliani was certain to win the Nobel Prize, colleagues said. "It took a little longer than we thought," said Abraham J. Siegel, dean of the Sloan School.

Modigliani is known for his excitable lectures, "his bullet-speed pace in speaking and his marathon-length persistence in oral debate," said his colleague Paul Samuelson, the Nobel laureate in economics in 1970.

He joked that he often told Modigliani, "Franco, when I am dead, you will be sorry that you never heard the sound of my voice.'

Two of the most influential postwar American economic theorists, Paul Samuelson and Milton Friedman, won the Nobel economics prize in 1970 and 1976 respectively.

The academy said Modigliani and Friedman differed in their theories of how people saved, with Friedman arguing that people saved both for themselves and their descendants and Modigliani contending they saved only for themselves.

Senior citizens, computers find compatibility in class

By TOM SCHULTES Manhattan Editor

Although many students have grown up with hand-held calculators, word processors and home computers, older citizens have to play catch-up if they want to keep up with their children and grandchildren.

To help people like retired professors, school teachers and administrators learn more of the world of computers, the K-State Center for Aging has organized, for the second time, an introductory class in microcomputers for senior citizens. The current session is in its second week.

Each Monday afternoon, participants attend classroom lectures at the Senior Service Center, 412 Leavenworth St., followed by individual instruction through volunteers.

The systems used have been donated by Bob Johnson of Midwest Computer, 3035 Anderson Ave.

One participant, S.T. Parker, 412 Ehlers Road, has several years experience in "the big computers," but before the class had "nothing to do with small computers at all."

Parker said some knowledge of the new personal computers was necessary so a person could "talk the same language as your children and grandchildren.'

Prior to his retirement in 1968, Parker was in charge of the main computing center at K-State.

Parker said at that time the center had "the biggest budget of anyone on campus," noting the personal computers he was now learning about could do the same functions "100, even 1,000 times (the older computers) and do it better.

"Things have changed so rapidly in less than 30 years," Parker said. Clifford Simpson, Rural Route 3, who teaches the class, is retired from a career in

The rules of law developed by government leaders are, for the most part, just and wise. But others are completely nonsense. Passage of what could be termed foolish or illconceived laws by state lawmakers is surprisingly common.

The following is a brief compilation of state laws passed within the last eight years that are of questionable merit:

- The 1982 Kentucky Legislature saw fit to make it illegal to operate a vehicle "upon any highway unless it is so constructed as to prevent its contents from escaping." Imagine engineers at General Motors, Ford and Chrysler shuttering at the thought of developing autos capable of preventing persons from discharging material from within.

Last year the state government in New Mexico tried to curtail another highway menace - lousysounding auto horns. In 1984, a law went on the books prohibiting the use of a horn "which does not produce a harmonious sound.'

- Tennessee lawmakers enacted a law in 1980 aimed at stopping inconsiderate neighbors cold in their tracks. Individuals "who open and leave open the gate of another, without permission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor" and liable to a $2

- Idaho and Arkansas authorities have attempted to bridle parents that verbally "abuse" school teachers and bus drivers. According to a law that has been on the books in Idaho since 1984, it is illegal to insult or abuse any teacher of the public schools in the presence of a pupil. In 1977, Arkansas legislators put a gag on parents who "threaten, curse, or use abusive language to a school bus

In Maryland, the "Free State," an obscure law requires messy housekeepers who maintain "a disorderly house" be subject to a $300 fine and not less than 10 days in jail. In 1982, the Legislature also passed a law stating individuals convicted of tarring and feathering shall be sentenced to not less than 18 months in jail.

Several years ago, North Carolina lawmakers in Raleigh passed legislation prohibiting persons from willfully standing, sitting, or lying on a highway in such a manner as to impede the regular flow of traffic. Presumably it is legal to do so if motorists aren't slowed by highway pedestrians.

State legislators in Albany, N.Y., are making visible efforts to represent constituents "from cradle to grave" by halting the practice of arresting "the dead body of a human being" in 1977.

Former President Harry S. Truman said: "Whenever you have efficient government you have a dictatorship." If his theory still holds water, the above laws aren't the product of incompetence, but of foresight.

Professor recovering from bypass surgery

By The Collegian Staff

William B. Griffitt, professor of sychology, is recovering at home following coronary bypass surgery Sept. 26 in Topeka.

"I'm a little stiff and sore," he said. "This kind of surgery really tears you up."

Griffitt, who teaches classes in psychology of sexual behavior, returned Sept. 22 from a convention in San Diego, and felt "a nasty pain" that evening, which he believed was a heart attack. He was admitted to a Manhattan hospital and transferred to Stormont-Vail Hospital in Topeka Griffitt will not be able to return to a full schedule of teaching until next semester and will spend his spare time catching up on his reading and writing.

Music department to present oratorio

By MARK McDERMET Collegian Reporter

The Department of Music will present "Solomon," an oratorio written in 1749 by George Frederick Handel tonight at 8 in McCain Auditorium.

The works of Handel and Johann Sebastian Bach are being performed throughout the world in commemoration of the 300th anniversary of their music, said Rod Walker, artistic director and associate music

"Last spring the departmental focus was on Bach, this fall semester it will be on Handel," Walker said.

The piece itself is essentially theater music with a story and drama to go along with it, Walker said. Handel's English oratorio is basically theatrical music, he said.

"The music is gorgeous. It's really lovely music," Walker said.

The performance will be presented by the Kansas State Choir, Kansas Bach Choir and Kansas State Symphony. Soloists are Jennifer Edwards, assistant instructor of music, Jerry Langenkamp, professor of music, Jean Sloop, professor of music, Marcia Duerfeldt, senior in music education and Veronica Caine, senior in applied music. Adrian Bryttan, assistant professor of music and University orchestra director will be conducting the performance. The department chose Handel's works because they are fun to sing, have audience appeal and aren't per-formed that much, Walker said. "Most people associate Handel with "Messiah" because it is performed by many at Christmas time," Walker said. "Solomon gives us another view of Handel.

"It gives the students a chance to listen to these composers and perform as well," Walker said.

The three parts of the oratorio deal with a different side of Solomon, a king of Biblical times. Part one emphasizes his piety and marital bliss. Part two portrays Solomon's wisdom and part three presents a musical mask for the visiting Queen of Sheba.

K-State ran by Allen County Community Junior College in three seven-inning games Tuesday.

The Wildcats stole 15 bases in 18 innings. They also had five home runs, pushing their season total to 20.

"We executed the hit-and-run very well today. We turned the kids loose and let them run," Coach Gary Vaught said. "We're doing a lot of things right, but we need to move up to the next level now."

K-State won the first game 12-5. K-State opened the contest by scoring five runs in the fifth inning and four more in the sixth. Jeff Turtle, Tom Parsons and Otto Kaifes hit home runs in the game for K-State. Kaifes was 4-for-4 with three RBIs and three runs scored. Turtle also had three RBIs

Gary Pridey led the offense in the second game, going 2-for-3 with two RBIs and four stolen bases.

Rocky Ferguson and Robbie Guinn combined in the second game to hold Allen County to one run as K-State

K-State won the third game 7-1, never trailing after Jim Donahue's two-run, first-inning home run.

Donahue's home run capped a three-run rally in the first. K-State added one in the third and three more in the fourth. The fourth inning rally included back-to-back triples by Tom Parsons and Pat Stivers.

The Wildcats are still undefeated with a 13-0 record.

"With our goal of 20 and 0, we are still on track," Vaught said, "but we're going to be tested with Creighton University will come to K-State for a double-header on Oct. 26. K-State will not play its scheduled game with Crowder Community College this Saturday because of a new rule which ends Kansas junior college play Oct. 15.

Creighton had a "top 10" recruiting year, Vaught said, featuring the number two draft choice in the nation.

K-State closes out its fall schedule on Oct. 27 with a double-header against Northeastern Oklahoma.

Injuries leave harriers battling numbers game

By TODD NIGHSWONGER Sports Editor

One can't blame K-State cross country Coach Steve Miller if he feels snakebitten this season.

Going into the 1985 cross country season, Miller had six returning lettermen on the women's team and four returning runners on the men's Miller could see the harriers improving on last year's performance when the women finished eighth in the nation and the men placed fourth in the National Collegiate Athletic Association's District Five Championships.

But slowly, one runner at a time, injuries began to take their toll this fall on both teams. The women were probably the hardest hit.

Before the season began, there were nine runners on the women's team. Since then, four have either gone out with injuries or quit the team. That leaves Miller with five runners, the nuber required to participate in a meet.

"I'm not happy with the injuries, obviously, and this has been a little bit of an unusually high season for injuries," Miller said. First, Betsy Silzer, who holds the women's school cross country record, had a recurring foot problem and was redshirted before the season Topeka West freshman Angie Barry and freshman walk-on Jill Wempe of Shawnee Heights in Topeka also have not run for K-State this fall. Barry received a hardship ruling due to a persistent irritation of the knee cap, according to Miller. Barry did run in the University of finishing 20th. Wempe has been out all season with stress fractures in both legs. Miller said she came to K-State with the injuries, which gradually got

Nebraska Invitational on Sept. 14,

Another Topekan, sophomore Cathy Rochford of Highland Park, decided to quit the team. Rochford was the No. 7 runner for the Wildcats last year.

"She just wasn't running well," Miller said of Rochford. "Cathy was our last (place) runner every time and was doing badly and didn't want to be in that situation.

Jacque Struckhoff, K-State's first All-American cross country runner, knows the pressure has been put on the remaining five women runners. Because the top five runner's times are counted in each team's meet points, if one of women runners should have a bad outing, there would be no one to pick up the slack. "We just need to get everybody closer together and moved up to the front (of each race)," Struckhoff said. "Not only do the front people have to do well, the back people do,

"Everybody counts and everybody has to run well. The pressure is put on everybody.

For now, Miller has decided to stick with five women runners but plans to add one or two from the track team for the Big Eight, District and NCAA Championships in November.

While no runners on the men's team are out with injuries, the men haven't been 100 percent healthy, either. In fact, the men harrier's top two runners have been less than full speed through much of the season to date — one problem the women have been able to avoid.

Carson City, Nev., senior Bryan Carroll, the returning No. 1 runner who placed sixth in the district meet in 1984, had been slowed by a foot infection through the first four meets but was at full speed for the Cowboy Jamboree Oct. 5 in Stillwater, Okla., finishing ninth.

The 'Cats' No. 2 runner - Manhattan senior Mike Rogers - had the flu in earlier meets.

With the injury, Carroll has been the top placer for K-State in two of the four meets and tied for top honors in another. Only at the Nebraska meet did Carroll finish any lower the fourth to cross the finish line for the 'Cats.

And many times Carroll, somewhat low on stamina due to the injured foot, has beat runners he will compete against in the Big Eight Conference Championships Nov. 2 in

"If I can beat these guys when I'm tired, I know I can beat them when I'm healthy," he said.

Part of the reason for the rash of injuries has been the high level of training implemented for the first time this season by the men's and women's cross country programs, Miller said.

"Part of that (injuries) I will take responsibility for because it was our desire to increase the intensity of the work this year," he said. "And sometimes intensity will bring upon that kind of result.

"But none of the injuries has been of such the nature that I'm concerned about them being long and farreaching"

Carroll agrees with Miller. "I think ed 10th and the men 16th.

a lot of it is that we've been having a real heavy work load up to now. And now we're cutting it back."

The reduced workload has come on the light practice days, Carroll said. The runners began the year running 80 miles a week, which will be cut to 60 by the end of the season.

The men's and women's teams were scheduled to compete in the Iowa State University Invitational last weekend but cancelled due to travel problems.

Counting the University of Wisconsin meet this Saturday, K-State will have competed in one meet in a four week span. From Sept. 14 through Oct. 5, the teams competed every week. Carroll said that with a rested men's squad, the results for the rest of the season should be positive.

"If we're all on, we're as tough as anybody in the nation," he said.

Despite the injuries, both teams are ranked as one of the top-20 teams in the country. The women are ranked 10th and the men 16th.

LA faces elimination in Game 6 of playoffs

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Orel Leonard Hershiser is the fourth in a line of five Orel Leonard Hershisers that also includes his son, Orel Leonard Hershiser the Fifth.

Come today, though, he's the only Orel Leonard Hershiser with whom Los Angeles Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda will be concerned.

With the Dodgers facing elimination, Hershiser will oppose 20-game winner Joaquin Andujar of the St. Louis Cardinals in Game 6 of the National League playoffs. The Dodgers trail the best-of-seven series three games to two after losing three straight in St. Louis.

Born in Buffalo, N.Y., and reared in Cherry Hill, N.J., this 27-year-old Huck Finn lookalike won 19 games for the Dodgers this year, including his last 11 in a row, while losing just three times.

Perhaps more importantly in Lasorda's scheme of things, Hershiser was 11-0 with a 1.08 ERA at Dodger Stadium.

"I think it's very fortunate that we're returning home for me to pitch," Hershiser says. "But I don't think it was entirely by accident. I think it was by plan."

Hershiser was the winner of Game 2 last Thursday night in Los Angeles, when he opposed Andujar. The right-handed sinkerball pitcher struggled early but pitched an eight-hit complete game to beat the Cardinals 8-2. Andujar, who was 21-12 during the season, lasted only 4½ innings, giving up six runs on eight hits, a pair of walks and his own throwing error.

One of the hits was to Hershiser, who drove in the Dodgers' first run of the game with a bouncing single over the head of third baseman Terry

"A pitcher never really likes to give up a hit to another pitcher," Hershiser says, flashing a toothy grin to break up the pattern of freckles on his face. "Especially when it drives in a run."

This year, he finished with a 2.03 ERA, third best in the league, nine complete games and five shutouts.

Both the Dodgers and the Cardinals have had injury problems during the playoffs. Dodgers shortstop Mariano Duncan banged up his left knee in Game 2, missed Game 3, then returned to the lineup.

Cardinals left fielder Vince Coleman also hurt his left leg, before Sunday's game when the leg got caught under the metal cylinder that automatically rolls the tarp onto the infield at Busch Stadium. Coleman missed the Sunday game and again was out of the lineup Monday.

Coleman was X-rayed twice, both time showing no fractures. Manager Whitey Herzog said he probably would start today, although the decision probably would not be made until just before game time. In the meantime, his status was listed as being day-to-day.

"I feel like I'm making progress," Coleman said before Monday's game.

Total Person program to help varsity athletes

By SARAH KESSINGER Collegian Reporter

Realizing that there are social, moral and spiritual aspects to the life of a student athlete is the basis for the Department of Intecollegiate Athletic's new Total Person pro-

Assistant Athletic Director and Head Track Coach Steve Miller, who is in charge of the program, said it has been formed "because the student athlete is really multi-faceted. Total Person is an attempt to touch those other facets."

The program will include speakers on subjects such as drugs and alcohol, time management, motivation, study skills, financial planning, community involvement and may go as far as etiquette. The first meeting, which will cover the topic of drugs and alcohol, is scheduled for Nov. 3 and is mandatory to all varsity athletes. It is also open to all University students.

The idea for Total Person was introduced by Athletic Director Larry Travis, who was responsible for starting a similar program at Georgia Tech where he was the athletic direc-

Miller said there will be one manatory and one voluntary meeting each semester.

"There are hopes that we can bring strong, energetic speakers to bring interest and stimulation to the athletes," Miller said. "We will not provide answers, but stimulate alternatives."

Miller said there has been a "giant swing" in the attitude of coaches that development in an athlete does not occur in a single area.

"Coaches are just as guilty as math instructors of thinking their program is the only program," Miller said, giving one example. "I think coaches historically have thought their area was the only one." Miller, who is also in charge of the University athletes' academic counseling program, said he hoped the athletic department, education system, faculty and staff would think of themselves as a service organization.

"That service is education," Miller said. "Education has no bounds. Anything we can provide for students in assisting educational development is an obligation and Total Person is part of that obligation."

The program, Miller said, came about after criticism of academic standards and progress of some athletes. However, the athletes' academic problems are no more or less than the average student at K-State, Miller said, noting the women's cross country team's cumulative GPA is over 3.0.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association's requirements for getting into school and maintaining eligibility "are not easier for an athlete," Miller said, "but as hard or harder."

Since the 1985 spring semester conluded, four University athletes have been dismissed for academic reasons. Basketball players Chris Morris, Derrick Howse and Tyrone Jackson were declared ineligible. Jennifer Jones was dismissed from the women's basketball team by Head Coach Matilda Mossman for lack of academic effort. Jones' grades were not a factor, Mossman said in September.

Jim Epps, academic counselor for the athletic department, said the Big Eight Conference and NCAA rules state that student athletes must receive 24 credit hours per academic year if they have declared a degree program.

They must have a minimum 1.6 GPA per academic year for under 60 total credit hours and a minimum 1.8 GPA for over 60 credit hours or a cumulative GPA of 2.0. The student athlete will be put on probation if he or she does not fulfill these requirements.

In response to the University of Kansas' recent problem of certain athletes not fulfilling credit-hour requirements, Miller said K-State attempted to avoid confusion and mistakes, and "provide an environment conducive to development."

Miller said Total Person was put together slowly to plan carefully and secure a good start. Some of the program's meetings will be geared to freshmen, while others will be for seniors. The meetings, he said, should serve the needs of all athletes.

The Total Person is a "continuation of responses to athletes' needs," Miller said.

As a former athlete himself, Miller said the positive intentions of the program would have been helpful when he was in school.

"I wish someone had done that for me," he said.

Royals KC's Kenney may miss next game

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Quarterback Bill Kenney, who took some frightful punishment in Kansas City's 31-20 loss Sunday to San Diego, may not play this week against the unbeaten Los Angeles Rams, Chiefs Coach John Mackovic said Tuesday.

"Bill is not going to play if he's hurt. I won't let him," Mackovic said. "Bill is really bruised up."

In the San Diego game Sunday, Mackovic said, Kenney "hurt his knee, his ankle and got hit in the back. I don't know if many people can appreciate how tough he is and how much he takes in a football game when he plays. He is one of the most courageous players I've ever been around."

The Chiefs have experienced a collapse in quarterback protection while losing the past two weeks on the road to the Los Angeles Raiders and the Chargers and seeing their record drop to 3-3. Kenney, a 4,000-yard passer two seasons ago, has been sacked 10 times in the two games and been hurried and pressured on numerous plays. His backup is third-year pro Todd Blackledge Blackledge.

"I think Todd has to be totally mackovic said. "We'll decide later in the week whether Bill's able to play."

Mackovic admitted it would be tough on Kenney to play against the Rams after not practicing all week. "He could do it easier than Todd

"He could do it easier than Toda could," he said. "We wouldn't feel comfortable, but I've seen it done before. I've seen it done, and I've seen quarterbacks have great games under those circumstances."

Kenney hit two touchdown passes against the Chargers, but the Chiefs hurt themselves with penalties and mistakes and twice blew 10-point leads.

"Bill was throwing the ball very well," Mackovic said. "But he was pressured and sacked and wasn't allowed to make the plays he can make. He does not misread coverage. The only thing that keeps him from having success is protection breakdowns."

On Monday, Mackovic instituted a number of get-tough new rules, including what some players said was the most strenuous practice session after a game since Mackovic's arrival in 1983.

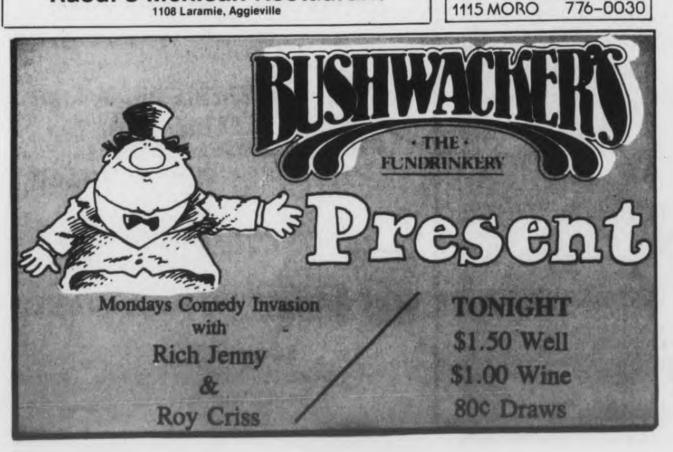

In addition to the Monday practice, the Chiefs will begin practicing in full pads three days a week instead of two; players will no longer be provided free lunches; players will no longer be allowed visitors at their hotel on road trips unless the visitor signs in; and players will be required to eat as a group at the hotel on road trips

Mackovic denied there had been a lack of discipline.

"I don't think so," he said. "We don't have people straggling in and out and missing things and not showing up. We don't have that. I like this group of guys."

Administration backs school prayer

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration on Tuesday urged the Supreme Court to allow student religious groups to meet for prayer and worship during public high school activity periods

"Congress has concluded that high school students are sufficiently mature to make the same distinctions we all do between neutrality and endorsement," government lawyer Charles Fried told the court.

He said a federal appeals court decision that banned such meetings at a Williamsport, Pa., high school casts "grave constitutional doubt" over the Equal Access Act of 1984.

In it, Congress made it unlawful for high schools receiving federal money and allowing some student groups to conduct meetings on school property to deny access to any student group based on what it proposes to discuss.

Lawyer urges support by court

But during an hour-long argument session Tuesday, three justices raised the possibility that the court might not decide the constitutional issue presented in the Williamsport case.

Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, John Paul Stevens and William J. Brennan repeatedly questioned whether the case should be dismissed because of a procedural defect.

Fried and the two other lawyers who participated in the argument session suggested that such an outcome would be inconclusive and unsatisfactory.

The dispute, the latest outgrowth of the high court's 1962 decision outlawing organized prayer sessions in public schools, arose when students in 1981 sought permission to meet at Williamsport Area High School during twice-a-week activity

During those periods, held during school hours, about 25 different student groups as varied as the Future Homemakers of America, the Spanish Club and the student newspaper meet. Faculty advisers are present.

Students also have the option of remaining in their homerooms, studying in the school library or seeking career guidance.

The students initially were granted permission to form a religious club, but after its initial meeting the club was told it would be "legally improper" for school officials to give the impression the meetings were endorsed or approved by the school.

About 45 of the school's 2,500 students attended the club's initial

The students sued, and a federal trial judge ruled for them. The religious club was allowed to meet during the 1983-84 school year. But the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year ruled that allowing the meetings would violate the constitutionally required separation of church and state.

The trial judge's ruling had not been appealed to the 3rd Circuit Court by the full school board, but only by then-board member John C. Youngman Jr.

It was Youngman's "legal standing" to mount such a challenge that was questioned by several justices Tuesday

Fried suggested that Congress' interest would best be served by reversing the appeals court as a matter of constitutional law.

Having the case wash out on the procedural "legal standing" issue would leave a "cloud" over the 1984 federal law, he said.

Tillage plan lowers due to soil erosion

By ERIC RHODENBAUGH

Farm productivity losses due to erosion can be lessened by using conservation tillage - an economical and ecological farming system, said John Hickman, extension specialist in soil and water conservation for the Department of Agronomy.

Conservation tillage is any tillage to reduce erosion and soil moisture tillage entails more spraying, and uses deeper planters.

tion tillage.

"You're not out running over the fields three or four times getting it ready for planting," Hickman said. Making fewer passes saves fuel, labor and wear and tear on equip-Eggerman, Riley county farmer.

Eggerman said one of the key aspects of conservation tillage is we're out planting. While a lot of them are deterred (from planting) because of spring rains or Hickman said the major benefit of conservation tillage is its prevention of topsoil erosion.

"Topsoil is generally the best, most productive soil," Hickman said. "If you have erosion, you lose topsoil and you lose productivity."

Leaving residue slows erosion in three ways, Hickman said. First, it acts as a buffer, lessening the damaging impact of raindrops. Secondly, the residue acts as a type of dam, slowing the flow of water after heavy rains. Last, it slows surface wind velocity, preventing extensive wind erosion during the dry summer months.

Hickman said a "tolerable loss" would be five tons per acre per year. In perspective, a one inch depth of topsoil over an entire acre weighs about 150 to 200 tons.

Weed and insect control are the two main problems associated with conservation tillage.

Eggerman said he has the most trouble with perennial weeds and cockleburs in soy beans.

'Cockleburs and soybeans are so closely related that you can't spray for one without damaging the other.'

Hickman said using a crop rotation system with conservation tillage can help alleviate weed problems.

'Rotating crops is a key to success in conservation tillage," he said. "It helps to control diseses, pests, weeds and gives you a nutrient advantage." Hickman said most weeds are crop specific. In other words, certain kinds of weeds will grow under the relative conditions of a certain kind of crop. Rotating crops prevents the buildup of any specific type of weed. Hickman said conservation tillage systems are custom designed for each field, depending on the characteristics of the field. 'I know a farmer up in northern

Riley county who has 24 fields and he uses 24 different tillage systems," he Recently, more farmers are using conservation tillage methods on at least part of their fields.

"It's almost become the normal way of doing things," Hickman said. But social and economic barriers prevent many from starting a conservation tillage system. "A lot of guys know one way they've been successful," Eggerman said. "With the way it is now, they can't afford any goofs, so they use the old tried ways without sticking their necks out."

Hickman said many farmers can't afford the financial risk of renting or purchasing special planters, sprayers and other implements needed for conservation tillage.

Farmers who want to try a conservation tillage system should do so on a small section of a field first, to see how well it is going to work, Hickman

Eggerman disagrees.

"I always said that if you're going to go into it, go into it whole hog with the attitude that you're going to make it work. If you don't, it's too easy to go back if it doesn't work system leaving at least 30 percent of the crop residue on the soil, helping loss. Instead of using plows, discs and other heavy equipment to prepare a seed bed, conservation

Hickman said farmers should be able to farm cheaper using conservament. "It (conservation tillage) does save me money. It saves a tremendous amount of labor and a tremendous amount of soil," said J. Wendell

Drilling could up costs, executive says By The Associated Press If this infill price is forced on our major gas

TOPEKA - An executive of KPL Gas Service told the Kansas Corporation Commission Tuesday that allowing infill drilling in the Hugoton field will drive the price of natural gas so high it will cause large industrial customers to turn to oil for their fuel.

That development, in turn, will force KPL Gas Service to charge its customers residential "unreasonable" prices for gas in order to make up the difference in fixed operational costs it must pay, said B. Jack Roberts, director of corporate gas supply for the Topekabased utility.

Roberts was the final of seven witnesses called by KPL Gas Service to oppose an application by Cities Service Oil and Gas Corp. seeking permission to add a second well on each 640-acre section in the Hugoton economic impact of infill drilling when evidence in these hearings before the KCC should be confined to the conservation issue. He also claimed some of Roberts' testimony was rebuttal to proponents' testimony and thus out of order.

KCC Chairman Michael Lennen took Lovett's objection under advisement for a later ruling.

Lovett also argued earlier that the testimony of another KPL Gas Service witness, economist William J. Gillen, should not be allowed for the same reason. That testimony dealt with Gillen's claim Hugoton field gas producers stand to reap a $1.5 billion windfall if infill drilling is allowed.

Roberts said the purpose of his testimony was to show the adverse economic impact increased production and the higher price which will be charged on the "new" gas will have on KPL Gas Service's Kansas per year per Kansas customer.

Roberts predicted market demand 'will reject the infill price increase," causing industrial customers who use large volumes of natural gas to turn to fuel oil, the price of which he said is declining.

He estimated the price of "new" gas produced through infill drilling in the Hugoton field would be about $3.75 per thousand cubic feet after the first year, and that the price of a comparable amount of fuel oil will be $2.75 at that time.

"If this infill price is forced on our major gas supplier, the Hugoton field, it will drive our price well above what it otherwise will be and will drive our customers away," Roberts said. "We are already having trouble holding our markets. Infill will just make it impossible...to compete with oil prices."

He estimated that KPL Gas Service could lose 30 percent of the volume of gas it now sells to in-

Representative says budget could be balanced by 1990

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery Tuesday called on his colleagues in Congress to "make the tough choices" involved in passing a balanced budget and cutting federal government spending.

Slattery, a Topeka Democrat, told a Statehouse news conference he's been appointed to a task force charged with studying the budget issue in an effort to find an acceptable alternative or reworking a bill currently under consideration in the House.

"I'm hopeful we can have a balanced budget by 1990 instead of postponing the day of reckoning until after the next election," Slattery said. "Other questions we have to clarify are what cuts will be imposed and on what groups.

"I feel that an across-the-boards cut is the only fair way. That way everyone is included in the reductions."

He said the existing bill would implement the balanced budget in 1991 and protects defense contracts and other "sacred cows."

"I like the concept of the president submitting a budget to Congress that meets balanced budget requirements."

The nearly dozen-member task force hopes to draft a tougher bill which he said should not include an escape hatch that would allow Congress to exempt itself from the balanced budget constraints and permit deficit spending on a three-fifths vote of the body.

"The president and Congress need statutory requirements to put the heat on them to make the tough choices. Without the heat, they will duck the tough choices."

Slattery called it a frustrating problem. He said Congress should be more like lawmakers on the state level where paying bills is a priority.

On other topics, Slattery applauded the action of President Reagan for his handling of the Middle East terrorists.

And he said he believes "a deal was cut" between the United States, Egypt and Italy in alerting U.S. military intelligence to the movements of four suspected Palestinian hijackers.

Police search for explosives

Booby-trapped bombs kill 2

By The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A stockbroker was killed Tuesday by a booby-trapped bomb left outside his office, and a woman was killed three hours later in a related blast at a former business associate's home, police said.

Police said an electrically triggered bomb blew up about 8:15 a.m. in the Judge Building, killing stockbroker Steven Christensen, who had once owned a controversial Mormon document. About three hours later, another blast at a suburban home killed a woman who apparently discovered a bomb intended for someone else, authorities said.

"We're following some leads we are privy to right now," said Police Chief Bud Willoughby, whose investigators were being assisted by the FBI and the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol and Firearms. Police asked business associates of Christensen and the owner of the home to evacuate their houses Tuesday afternoon while they were searched for bombs, Salt Lake County Sheriff Pete Hayward said.

Police Lt. Bill Gray said at least eight bomb threats involving other buildings in downtown Salt Lake City had been reported, but none was determined to be valid.

The home belonged to Gary Sheets, a business consultant who authorities said once worked with Christensen.

Christensen, 31, had become wellknown for obtaining the "Salamander Letter," containing a contemporary account of the translation of the Book of Mormon, and then donating it to the church.

Police evacuated two floors of the Coordinated Financial Center Building, a block away from the Judge Building. Sheets is chairman of Coordinated Financial Service.

Police said the first blast was triggered by an electrical timer connected to high explosives. The bomb contained nails and other shrapnel, Gray said.

"It looked like he had it in his arms. He took the full impact," Olpin said. "It was so loud when it went off. The whole building shook."

Hayward said the bomb at the residence was in a cardboard box at the corner of the garage with a man's name written on the outside. The victim had walked from her house to the garage to get into her car.

Seaway wall collapses, blocks traffic for ships

By The Associated Press

THOROLD, Ontario — Ships carrying grain, steel and military equipment backed up Tuesday on the St. Lawrence Seaway, and one official predicted it would be weeks before a collapsed lock wall would be repaired and traffic allowed to

"It's absolutely impossible to give an idea of the exact length of time," Seaway Authority President William A. O'Neil said about the repairs.

"We're not looking for a permanent repair," he said. "Our primary objective is to get navigation going. But I fully expect we will be open before the end of the shipping season."

John Adams, deputy chief engineer for the St. Lawrence Development Corp., the U.S. operator of the waterway, said about 55 ships were involved — 15 moored in Lake Ontario waiting to go west, seven in the Welland Canal, eight in Lake Erie and another 25 at other Great Lakes ports.

Adams said that number could increase as more ships steam into the

The Welland, which links the Atlantic Ocean, the St. Lawrence River and Lake Ontario with the rest of the Great Lakes, is scheduled to close for the winter at the end of December.

A 125-foot-long piece of a wall in Lock No. 7 of the canal dislodged Monday, trapping the Liberian freighter Furia for about eight hours. The Furia was headed from Milwaukee to Alexandria, Egypt, with 16,800 metric tons of grain aboard. No one was injured.

The Furia managed to back out of the lock Monday night after the chamber was filled with water to help support the weakened wall.

Michael Pipia, commercial manager of Detroit's Fednav Lake Services Inc., said his shipping company had seven or eight ships tied up. Among the cargo, he said, is military equipment for the U.S. Army in Europe and steel for auto factories in Michigan and elsewhere in the Midwest.

Port officials in Duluth, Minn., said they were worried about what effects a prolonged shutdown of the canal would have on grain shipments.

Bill Cortes, a spokesman for the Seaway Port Authority of Duluth, said a one-week shutdown "won't affect grain movements that badly. If it's going to be two months, we've got a problem."

Police checking doctor's prescriptions

By The Associated Press

INDEPENDENCE — Police Tuesday were using computers to check through records of prescriptions issued by a Coffeyville doctor, who state medical officials have ordered to stop giving patients habit-forming drugs.

The Kansas Board of Healing Arts issued the order on Monday, marking the second time in five years that physician John Vakas has been investigated by the board that licenses the about 4,000 doctors in the state.

The board's lawyers say they have records of hundreds of questionable prescriptions Vakas has written for medications designed to block pain, suppress appetites, reduce depression and control hyperactivity in children.

"We have a huge amount of his prescriptions that we question," said Don Strole, attorney for the board. "One of our concerns is that the people receiving these drugs are not really patients, that he is just dishing these drugs out to people."

The board charges that Vakas has prescribed excessive amounts of potentially dangerous medications — drugs police say frequently are bought and sold on the black k-state union upc issues & ideas market — to patients that do not have sound medical reasons for taking them. Similar charges were leveled at Vakas during an investigation by the board in 1980.

The order came after Independence and Coffeyville police on Friday searched Vakas' office, two pharmacies in Independence and one in Coffeyville where Vakas' patients were reported to have had their prescriptions filled. Authorities said they were investigating possible violations of the state's controlled substances laws.

County Attorney Sally Pokorny said today that records seized at the pharmacies and Vakas' office were being put on police computers so they can be compared "in three or four different ways." She said Vakas was the only doctor whose records had been seized.

The board's lawyers say they were aware of the criminal investigation but consider it separate and unrelated to the board's order against Vakas. No charges have been filed against Vakas and law enforcement sources say it may take weeks to evaluate the doctor's prescription records.

"I can't be specific about what we're after until we've sifted through all the information," Pokorny said. "The earliest I could say we'll file charges or we won't would be the end of the week."

A man answering the telephone at Vakas' office today said the doctor was out of town until Monday but added that he had no comment on the investigation or the board's order. The man hung up the phone when he was asked his identity.

Vakas' attorney, Larry Wall of Wichita, also refused to comment on the criminal investigation, but said he believed Vakas' prescribing methods are within acceptable medical standards.

"I anticipate Dr. Vakas' prescriptions, when viewed in context with the patients' histories, their illnesses, and their medical conditions, will be determined to be appropriate and within the standards of care for physicians in Kansas," Wall said.

The order against Vakas triggered a public hearing on the case within the next 90 days. Vakas was notified of the order when an investigator visited him at his office in Coffeyville, a town of about 15,000 people in southeast Kansas.

Vakas is a 1964 graduate of the University of Kansas School of Medicine and has practiced in Coffeyville since he first was licensed in 1966.

Strole said the board's order was based on pharmacy records from 1983 through 1985. He said the records showed that more than 3,000 of Vakas' prescriptions were filled at a single pharmacy in nearby Independence during that time.

All the drugs Strole said Vakas prescribed in large amounts — preludin, dilaudid, demerol and ritalin — are available only with a doctor's prescription under state and federal laws and carry manufacturers' warnings that they can be addictive.

Strole said that from May 1983 to May 1985 Vakas wrote 1,198 prescriptions, filled at a pharmacy in Independence, for a diet pill called preludin. Strole said that during that same period, the pharmancy received only 30 prescriptions from other doctors for the same drug.

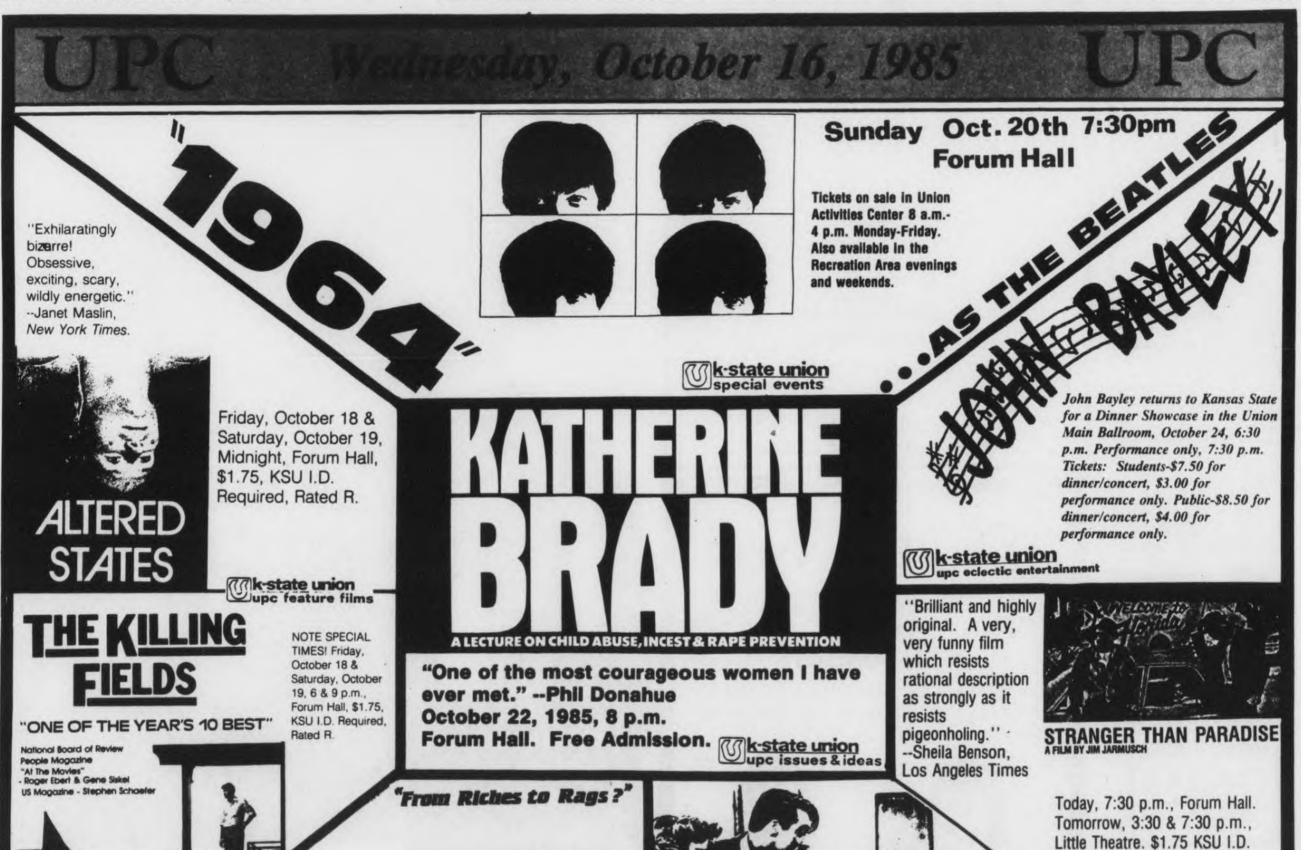

However, Wall criticized the board for basing its order on a comparison between Vakas and other doctors calling the method "sloppy at best." Wall also questioned whether the board's order Monday was related to Vakas' lawsuit in 1982, which accused the board of denying the doctor's civil rights during the board's investigation in 1980.

Playoffs stall NBC's efforts

CBS wins in ratings listing

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - CBS got a boost from its regular series and movies and from the competing baseball playoffs on NBC to take its first victory of the 1985-86 television season, according to figures released Tuesday by the A.C. Nielsen Co.

With "Murder, She Wrote," "Dallas" and "60 Minutes" in the Top 10, CBS was able to halt NBC's winning streak that included every summer week except one and the first two weeks of the current prime-time campaign. CBS finished the week of Oct. 7-13 with a 17.7 rating to NBC's 17.3 and ABC's 15.6.

Season to date, NBC leads with an 18.2 rating to CBS' 17.3 and ABC's 14.5. NBC and CBS have improved their ratings over the comparable period last year, while ABC has suffered a ratings decline from one year ago.

The week was typical in one respect. NBC's "The Cosby Show" was the clear champion again, picking up a 30.7 rating (percentage of the nation's 85.9 million TV homes) and a 47 share (percentage of sets in use.)

"Cosby" was supposed to be preempted by a baseball pre-game show, but NBC was granted permission from Major League Baseball to delay by a few minutes the first pitch of Game 2 of the National League playoffs last Thursday. NBC then replaced the pregame show with "The Cosby Show" and went on to its best nightly rating for the week.

After "The Cosby Show," the Top 10 looked this way: CBS' "Murder, She Wrote," with its highest-ever rating, 24.9, in second; ABC's "Who's the Boss?," also with its best performance, a 24.8 rating; the second part of NBC's miniseries, "The Long Hot Summer;" ABC's "Dynasty;" CBS' "Dallas" and CBS' "60 Minutes," tied for sixth; ABC's "Growing Pains" and CBS' movie, "Love, Mary," tied for eighth, and

ABC's movie, "Toughlove."

Two years ago, when NBC was the No. 3 network, the week of baseball playoffs marked NBC's top-rated early week, while last week's games produced NBC's worst showing so far. NBC had opposed the extension of the playoffs from a best-of-five to a best-ofseven series. This is the first time the league championship series have been seven-game series.

None of the baseball games made the Top 10, with Wednesday's Game 1 of the National League series between St. Louis and Los Angeles ranking 14th and Thursday's second game ranking 16th. In all, the prime-time games averaged a 16.8 rating, which Jaffe said is comparable to 1984's 17.3 and 1983's 16.5. So far, the NL series is doing better than the American League match-up between Toronto and Kansas City.

ABC had four shows in the Top 10, its best performance of the season, but the network also had 12 of the bottom 20 programs.

Missouri farm couple cancels 'Bitter Harvest Sweepstakes'

By The Associated Press

UNIONVILLE, Mo. - The twicepostponed raffle of a 478-acre farm by a northern Missouri couple who hoped to raise enough money to pay their debts and start anew has been

Raymond Hirst said Tuesday that he and his wife, Hazel, decided to drop "The Bitter Harvest Great Farms Sweepstakes" after concluding they wouldn't be able to come close to raising the approximately $500,000 they hoped for.

"There's no use continuing if it doesn't look like it's going to make it," he said. "It's not fair to the public and it's not fair to anyone else."

Hirst said they would begin refunding money to those who entered the raffle by purchasing Hirst's book of poetry about farm problems, titled "Bitter Harvest."

Of the $10 purchase price for Hirst's book, $2 was for postage and handling. Hirst said he and his wife, both 53, would return $8 to raffle entrants who send a stamped, selfaddressed envelope to Bitter

Mo. 63565, and include the number listed on the book

"We don't want the books back," he said. "The book's theirs. I appreciate them keeping it and reading it once in a while, and maybe they can understand what is going on out here."

Under Missouri law, purchase of a book was not required to enter the raffle. Those who did not want to buy one could enter by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the Hirsts.

Last month, Bobby George, a spokesman for the Missouri attorney general's office, said the state was keeping an eye on the sweepstakes to determine "just what is a reasonable time" during which the raffle should be held.

Originally, the drawing was scheduled for July 4 in the town square of this farming community of 2,200 near the Iowa border. But with entries coming in more slowly than anticipated, it was first pushed back to Labor Day, then postponed indefinitely before being canceled. "We have been discussing it for the Harvest, P.O. Box 82, Unionville, last week," Hirst said. "We kept hoping that something would break, but it doesn't look like it is going to. "The mail is still coming in, but you can't keep something going forever," he said. "You want to be honest about the whole thing." George said the Hirsts called the attorney general's office Tuesday morning with word that the raffle was off. "We will continue to watch the situation," he said. "We want to make sure everyone gets their money back. But they've been upfront with everything they've done." Hirst said the project which he and his wife began in July of last year had brought in about $200,000, from which they had to pay for producing the book and other expenses.

"We tried for $500,000," he said. "That would have paid our debt off and given us a start in something else. But if we could have got $400,000, we might have kept going.

"In the back of my mind, there was always the feeling that possibly somebody who got it would sell it back to us, and we could stay," he

Tim Fitzgerald, senior in journalism and mass communications, said the next university president would have to be a "tremendous communicator." He said the university lacked in salesmanship and needed to sell K-State for all its different aspects, not just one area.

The faculty session followed with many concerns expressed on the academic qualifications of the presidential candidates.

The president should be prepared to go to the Legislature to express faculty concerns, Strecker said.

Some faculty members expressed the concern that athletics were often emphasized in a presidential search. Stuart Swartz, professor of civil engineering, said the school tends to overplay athletics but can avoid that by overplaying academics instead.

In the open session of the forum, Brett Lambert, junior in political science, said he would like to see a president who is young in state of mind, vivacious and willing to bring

"I would like to see somebody who's looking for a three- to fouryear stint, not a 10-year stint," Lambert said.

"If I knew I was dealing with someone with AIDS I would wear a glove and be a little more careful," he said. "I hope I would be as careful with every accident victim, but unfortunately that doesn't always happen."

Tout said he would take his views to an annual meeting of Big Eight health officials Thursday in Lincoln, Neb., for discussion.

Though he has not researched the topic, University attorney Richard Seaton said the legal rights of AIDS victims on campus to use University facilities would be the same as those of any student.

In considering the rights of its students to be informed about AIDS, the University of Colorado has decided to follow the loose guidelines set by the American College Health Association, said Kaye Howe, CU's vice chancellor for academic affairs.

CU had one student die from AIDS after leaving the university in 1983, Howe said. It has just begun to develop its policy recently, however. 'In our policy, we will try like any university to educate our students and faculty about AIDS and take away some of the fear," Howe said. "I hope that all of us (universities) can do this without increasing the panic and the mindless fear people have of the disease.'

In Kansas, although state Board of Regent's schools have no set policy on AIDS, Center for Disease Control guidelines have been recommended to the State Board of Education. The guidelines state that school children with AIDS are to be allowed to attend public schools if local health officials, school officials and the child's parents believe the move to be in the child's best interest.

At regents' schools, university presidents may find themselves questioned informally on what their schools are doing to educate students and develop policy on AIDS at the next regents meeting, said regents executive director Stanley Koplik.

No discussion of an AIDS policy for regents' schools is on the meeting agenda, however, Koplik said.

Senate committee recommends abolishing military chiefs of staff

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The military Joint Chiefs of Staff have become obsolete, unable to give effective advice, and should be abolished because they pose an obstacle to effective joint operations by the military services, a Senate staff report said Wednesday.

The report, the product of 21/2 years of work by the bipartisan staff of the Senate Armed Services Committee, recommends that the joint chiefs be replaced with a Joint Military Advisory Council.

It would be composed of five four-star officers, each of whom would be on his last tour of service, in order to "create a source of truly independent military advice, uninhibited by service responsibilities and pressures."

The ranking officers of the Army, Navy,

Marine Corps and Air Force would continue to head their services but would lose their role as direct military advisers.

At present, the report said, the chiefs wear two hats, as military advisers and service heads, and consequently are not able to do either job well.

Identifying 34 problem areas, the report makes 91 specific recommendations for change, many aimed at improving the effectiveness of military operations involving more than one service.

The committee was told the current system is "fundamentally flawed and in need of critical structural reform."

The report was unveiled at a committee hearing in which most members agreed change has become essential.

But debate flared over how radical that change should be.

"There will be those who say the system ain't broke, don't fix it," said Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., the committee chairman who is a major general in the Air Force Reserve and was his party's 1964 presidential candidate.

"However, it is broke and we need to fix it," said Goldwater, who is retiring at the end of his present term. "If we don't, our military effectiveness will be seriously impaired. If we have to fight tomorrow, these problems will cause Americans to die unneccessarily. Even worse, they may cause us to lose the fight.'

Sen. John Warner, R-Va., a former secretary of the Navy, disagreed. He said some of the proposed remedies would subject the armed forces and the Pentagon to "open heart surgery."

And he said Goldwater's characteristic

Continuity in school system may hike teaching standard

By MARY ROEHL Collegian Reporter

Combining education from elementary schools to graduate schools into one system will create a better educational system, a senior fellow at the Institute for Educational Leadership in Washington, D.C., said Wednesday.

Harold L. Hodgkinson addressed the topic "Demographic Imperatives for Kansas" at the third annual Chester E. Peters Lecture in Student Development.

People working in an educational institutions, such as elementary schools and junior high schools, have little awareness of activities in other institutions, Hodgkinson said. Students, on the other hand, see the institutions as a unitary system because they go through it.

"We need to begin seeing the educational system from the perspective of the people who move through it," Hodgkinson stated in his report, "All One System: Demographics of Education, Kindergarten through Graduate School." Demographic and social changes in students will change the educational system faster than any other facet of society.

"We tend not to perceive change until after it has happened," Hodgkinson said. "It's very easy in the Heartland, where change comes slowly and gradually, to miss the importance of those changes as they occur, because they do not occur as violently in Kansas as they do in California, Texas and Florida. They come a little later and a little gentler.'

Because Kansas is a low-transient state, it is important to look at the children growing up in the state because they are its future, he

To develop educational systems which will maximize learning, educators should make an active effort to know the demographic changes of children entering the school system and how these children are progressing, he said.

U.S. 'most' learned country in world, Census study says

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Giant strides in schooling since 1940 "have made the American people the most educated in the world," but the quality of U.S. schools sagged in the 1970s, a Census Bureau study concluded Wednesday.

The special demographic study by two Census analysts also found evidence that the "return" on a college education - the edge in earnings that college graduates have over high school graduates - is growing again after shrinking in the

"Less than 45 years ago ... a solid majority of young adults were either high school dropouts or had never gone beyond elementary school," said the report. "Today...high school dropouts have been reduced to a small minority."

In 1940, only 38 percent of those ages 25 to 29 had attained a high school diploma, and a mere six percent had college degrees. Now, the report said, 86 percent of those surveyed by the Census Bureau said they have high school diplomas and 22 percent possess college degrees.

'These are very large trends and they have made the American people the most educated in the world," said the report, "Education in the United States: 1940-1983," by Dave M. O'Neill and Peter Sepielli.

It cited surveys showing that in 1980-81 almost 32 percent of all U.S. adults 25 or older had at least some college education, compared with 17.3 percent of East Germans, 17.2 percent of Canadians, 15.5 percent of Swedes, 14.5 percent of Japanese, and 7 percent of Hungarians.

The Census figure on high school graduation is markedly higher than that used by the U.S. Department of Education. Vance Grant of the National Center for Education Statistics said 76 percent of the students who were fifth-graders in public and private schools in 1975-76 graduated in 1983. Another Education official, Alan Ginsburg, said that figure does not include those who obtain high school equivalency diplomas after dropping O'Neill, the Census analyst, said, "Some people could lie. That's definitely a possibility."

Numerous groups of educators, civic and business leaders have deplored the state of U.S. high schools in recent years and called for steps to make them more rigorous.

The Census report said the education gap between the races has narrowed and may have helped blacks make economic gains.

It pointed to Scholastic Aptitude Test scores, results from the National Assessment of Educational Progress and other evidence to support its conclusion that "the quality of schooling has declined, especially during the 70s."

The report said that the poor showing of American students on some international scholastic comparisons is due in part to the low rate of attrition from U.S. schools. Countries with high dropout or flunkout rates generally look better on such rankings.

It said many people have been concerned "about a glut of college graduates" and that the value of a college degree "will not hold up if too many people get college educations.'

Faculty flyer offers advice to public

By BRENDA KITCHEN Collegian Reporter

If a city government has a problem, faculty member Mark Daniels is willing to fly to their aid literally.

Mark Daniels, associate professor of political science and director of the masters of public administration program, received his pilot's license last year and is now using it to help city governments and gain visibility for

K-State and its MPA program.

The master's of public administration program at K-State is small, but it was completely revised this fall. The program is now more of a professional degree designed for students wanting to enter the public administration profession, Daniels said.

As the director, Daniels said he wanted the program to gain visibility. Using his expertise in public administration, Daniels acts as a consultant to city governments to gain this visibility.

Flying to appointments at 150 mph, in planes he rents from Spicer Aircraft Inc., enables him to consult with public administrators throughout the state without wasting valuable time.

Nichols Hall renovation complete

Mural installation to miss dedication

By BOB SCHEIBLER Collegian Reporter

Although the renovation of Nichols Hall is complete, one element of the original plan for renovation of the building is still missing.

When the fate of Nichols Gymnasium was uncertain, the 1975 Student Senate allocated $10,000 toward a Nichols Gymnasium account. The money from this original account will be used to fund a mural for the east wall of the Nichols Hall lobby. The mural will be painted by Eric Bransby, a Colorado Springs, Colo.,

Bransby has been painting murals for 35 years. He said many artists do murals as a sideline to other art forms, but he concentrates on murals.

He would not comment on the price he would receive for the commission on the mural, but said he was taking on the project as a professional challenge and because students' efforts had saved the

The mural was to be in place when Nichols opened this fall, but plans were altered when Bransby moved from Kansas City, Mo., to Colorado Springs this spring. Bransby's current plans are to finish the mural early next year.

Bransby was commissioned to paint the Nichols mural after winning a University-sponsored competition in the spring of 1984 to select an artist to paint the Nichols' mural. Bransby's work appears in the city hall in Sedalia, Mo., the St. Paul School in Skokie, Ill., the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs, the University of Missouri-Kansas City and Brigham Young University in Salt Lake City.

Bransby is one of a handful of artists in the United States who has painted murals in the fresco process. He has recently been asked to assist in the restoration of the Colorado Springs Fine Art Center exterior fresco murals. The fresco technique involves applying pigments to wet plaster.

The mural is to be located on the east wall of the Nichols lobby directly above the entrances to the performance laboratory. The performance laboratory is a theater where the location of the stage in relation to the seating can be changed. The mural will be visible from the ground floor as well as from both balconies in the lobby. The size of the mural is about 400 square feet.

The mural shows 18 figures in action and depicts the past and future uses of Nichols. The theme of the mural is student achievement, with athletics emphasized because of the history of Nichols. In preparing to paint the mural, Bransby sculpted a model of each of the figures that appears in the

The mural is being painted by both brush and airbrush methods on 26 individual panels.

Civil rights suspension alters Nicaraguan war

MANAGUA, Nicaragua -Opposition leaders said Wednesday the suspension of civil rights will intensify the war-like atmosphere in this leftist-ruled nation and may encourage support for U.S.-backed

President Daniel Ortega announced Tuesday night that free expression, public assembly and the right to strike had been suspended because of "brutal aggression" by the United States and "its internal allies" against the Sandinista

His decree subjects Nicaraguans to inspection of mail and search and seizure without warrant. Authorities have no obligation to release information about those arrested. News media must submit their material to the Interior Ministry's director of communications before publication or broadcast. Similar rules have not affected foreign journalists in the past, but the scope of the current decree was not clear immediately.

La Prensa, the main opposition newspaper, had been required previously to submit material dealing with "military affairs and the nation's economic relations."

In a speech broadcast nationally, Ortega said, "In response to the terrorist politics of the United States ... internal pawns of imperialism

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador - The auxiliary archbishop of San Salvador said Wednesday the government had reached an agreement with rebels for the release of President Jose Napoleon Duarte's kidnapped daughter and "only the mechanics" remained to be worked Monsignor Gregorio Rosa Chavez said Inez Guadalupe Duarte Duran, 35, and a woman kidnapped with her six weeks ago could be freed within hours.

The Roman Catholic prelate said the agreement had been worked out in three meetings over the weekend and again Tuesday between the rebels and Archbishop Arturo Rivera Damas.

The rebels had offered to free the two women in exchange for the freedom of 34 guerillas they claimed were in jail. The government freed three people and ordered amnesty for a fourth in what it said was a sign of good will, but said it could only account for 28 prisoners on the rebel list.

Woman asks for apartheid mercy

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - The mother of a black man due to be hanged this week for a political assassination saw her son Wednesday and vowed, "He will die like Jesus, for his people." Veteran anti-apartheid lawmaker Helen Suzman urged that the life of the condemned man, Benjamin Moloise, 30, be spared. "An act of clemency in the case of Benjamin Moloise would do South Africa a great deal of good, both with regard to the black community at home and internationally," said Suzman, a member of the opposition Progressive Federal Party, which opposes apartheid, the government's official policy of racial separation.

Meanwhile, anti-apartheid violence continued. Police said they shot and killed two blacks in the Cape Town squatter camp of Crossroads. Three others, including a 2-year-old baby, were reported injured when the police fired on stone-throwers. Witnesses in the black township of Langa, also near Cape Town, said security forces shot and killed a 14-year-old girl among a group of blacks who appeared to be enforcing a boycott of white retailers by forcing other blacks to empty their shopping bags.

TOPEKA - Saying there were several legal questions that deserve further airing, the Kansas Corporation Commission on Wednesday decided to hear oral arguments on requests from six groups for rehearing of the historic Wolf Creek rate case.

All three owners of the $3.05 billion Wolf Creek nuclear power plant sought a rehearing after state utility regulators slashed their requests for $508.9 million in higher rates to pay for the plant. In addition, three groups which intervened in the case asked for rehearing on various grounds.

No date has been set for the oral arguments, but Lennen said they likely will occur during the first week of November.

SAN ANDREAS, Calif. - Prosecutors filed eight murder counts Wednesday against Charles Ng, one-time companion of a survivalist who has been linked to the disappearance of nearly two dozen people. Calaveras County District Attorney John Martin said the action was the first step in extraditing Ng from Canada, where he has been held since his arrest this summer.

The complaint includes eight murder counts and one charge of being an accessory to murder. It also alleges special circumstances that could bring Ng a sentence of death in the gas chamber.

Kansas folklore, culture basis of book

By JANET MATTHIAS Collegian Reporter

Folklore is something every person is familiar with, whether they know it or not, said William Koch, associate professor emeritus of English and folklore.

"As with any state, there are folklore items that are unique to Kansas as a state," said Koch, former American Folkore and Folk Literature instructor.

Koch began teaching American Folklore and Folk Literature at K-State in 1947 and received his master's degree at the University in 1949. He retired in 1983 and has been working on various projects and publications since that time.

Koch has collected and put many of the state's folklore into a book -'Folklore from Kansas."

The 5,162 folklore items in the book deal with Kansas folk beliefs, customs and superstitions. Koch said many of the items in the book came from students in his classes "My students liked to field-collect items when they went home," Koch said. "Overall, we collected over 15,000 (identification) slips on Kansas folklore items for that book.

Koch said the items in the book colds or pneumonia; and a dirty sock "cover just about everything in Kansas folklore."

Koch said the three major categories of Kansas folklore deal with the prevention and cure of illness and injuries, the weather and

The following folklore items were among the most repeated items in the category of prevention and cure of illnesses and injuries: a copper band worn around the wrist or arm will cure rheumatism; feed a cold, starve a fever; rub turpentine and lard on the chest to cure a chest cold; put fried onions between two pieces of wool and apply to the chest for

The roots of folklore items are difficult to determine, because the item often changes over time and location, Koch said. However, the most influential groups in the origins of Kansas folklore are the Germans, Russian-Germans, Scandinavians and Czechoslavakians, he said.

Koch said folklore does not have the affect on people it once did.

"The influence has been lessened because of modern science, like with the weather." Koch said. "Now we have scientific explanations for

Regents plan review of search committee

By the Collegian Staff

The Board of Regents will discuss faculty and student senate resolutions regarding the composition of the Search Committee for President and the renaming of several departments at its Friday meeting at Pittsburg State University.

The Faculty Senate resolution calls for the addition of three faculty members to the search committee in response to the regents addition of three alumni members. The Student Senate legislation "implores" the regents to address the imbalance caused by the alumni additions, but calls for no specific action.

The regents will also hear proposals for the renaming of one college and two departments at K-State. Proposed changes are: renaming the College of Home Economics to the College of Human Ecology; the Department of Family and Child Development to the Department of Human Development and Family Studies; and the Department of Pre-Design Professions to the Department of Environmental Design. The board will also review the proposal to name the veterinary medicine teaching building.

The regents will discuss a request by K-State to enter into an agreement with the International Student Exchange Program to establish and facilitate the regular exchange of students between K-State and other cooperating institutions abroad.

K-State is also requesting that the board increase the appropriations for the renovation and construction of an addition to Weber Hall. The original appropriation was for $1,503,123 and the University is asking this be increased to $1,925,000.

Reagan combats terrorists

While Reagan made speeches and seemed unfazed by the sea hijacking of the Italian cruise liner the Achille Lauro last week, many felt the United States was going to have to bend to terrorism. Again.

But Reagan took action to intercept the Egyptian airliner carrying the terrorists out of Egypt to what the they thought was safety.

In a bold move that may have stepped on a few foreign toes, Reagan won big in the hearts of U.S. citizens.

The mission was a flawless operation by the U.S. Navy and intelligence personel. For many Americans, it was a victory over the terrorism that has plagued U.S. relations. Reagan said it best, telling terrorists, "You can run, but you can't hide."

While some believe a deal was struck with Egypt, Egyptian leaders deny the country had anything to do with the capture of the hijackers. But, as Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., so succinctly stated, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak was denying a deal to "save his own political hide at home."

The four Palestinian hijackers are being held at the Sigonella Naval Air Base in Italy. Even if U.S. attempts at extradition of the hijackers fail, the terrorists face a tough legal system - one where courts are experienced with terrorist attacks.

In the latest issue of Newsweek, former U.S. ambassador to Italy Richard Gardner, professor at the Columbia Law School, New York, said the Italians will give "swift justice." He said, "They (Italians) will throw the book at them (terrorists)."

Maybe the Gipper will pull his play book out and send in another good play or two to assure the United States will not be the focus of any future terrorist attacks.

Senators should resist spending $700,000

"Get your money for nothing" is how the University has portrayed the $700,000 which Student Senate is now in the process of deciding how to use.

Do you want to know how senate wound up with that $700,000? The way it is explained by the University and by Student Senate Chairman Mark Jones, senior in management, involves a lot of numbers and confusion. As a matter of fact, when Jones first explained it to senate he skipped over the most important numbers and hardly anyone noticed.

Because I don't want to bore you with several paragraphs of tedium, I'll just point out the important details. The refinancing of student bonds is expected to free up $3.4 million which has been collected from the students to pay for the Union, Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex and KSU Stadium bonds There is nothing unusual about refinancing bonds. Warren Corman, director of facilities for the Board of Regents, said, "It's pretty simple. There's not much to it.'

The University of Kansas has already done it and Wichita State University has done it

What is unusual is that the magical $700,000 has appeared. It surfaced when the University administration decided that only $2.7 million of the $3.4 million freed up by the refinancing should be applied toward reducing student debt for the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

Consequently, $700,000 more than is currently needed for the coliseum will have to be borrowed through the issuance of bonds for the coliseum. The bond issuance money, plus interest, will come out of student wallets over the next decade. But before the bond issuance can occur, senate has to decide on a way to spend the $700,000.

STEVE MILLIGAN Guest Columnist

This is a fine example of backward planning. Usually a constituency comes to a governmental body and asks for money. Then the government tries to find some way to finance the need through taxes. Essentially what we have here is, first, a decision to extend a tax on the students and then a search for a need.

No administrator has given a complete explanation of why the entire $3.4 million should not be used to reduce the coliseum bond issuance. University Controller John Moore said the $2.7 million figure was decided by "a consultant with a computer" program" who performed an optimization

When Student Senator Lori Rock, junior in accounting, asked him if he could tell senate anything more about the process, Moore said, "I can't tell you." When I spoke to Corman a few days later he said both Moore and Vice President for Administration and Finance George Miller must know how the $2.7 million figure was Something about all of this just doesn't seem right. I know a few things about optimization processes. I have attended several lectures and taken a graduate level course on the subject.

There is practically no way that an optimization could have been performed without interaction between the University Controller's Office and the consultant during the process.

Thursday, October 17, 1985 - 4

I believe no optimization process was performed. It seems likely that the numbers were chosen arbitrarily. That would be consistent with recent University practices. It wasn't long ago that the University came up with a large number (16,000 seats for the coliseum) without performing any studies.

The University has portrayed the $700,000 decision process as if it is too much for the students to understand. They just keep saying this is a wonderful deal and we should accept it.

I believe one of the main reasons they started this whole $700,000 thing is to get the students to forget about the coliseum problems which have arisen from poor planning.

There is no doubt in my mind that University administrators and student senators know that the $700,000 is not for

If senate wants to do something good for the students, they should choose to not spend the money at all. Then the students would borrow $700,000 less for the coliseum.

But I have doubts about whether senate will decide to do that. All levels of government tend to find ways to spend whatever money they get. Hopefully, senate will be able to overcome that tendency.

But now, under unfavorable circumstances, those creditors are known.

Recently, the Christian Church Extension Foundation filed papers in Riley County District Court regarding the foreclosure of MCC after not receiving payment on the school's debt since January.

Prompting the action was the school's non-response to a request for payment in mid-August, following a similar request by Columbia Savings of Manhattan, which did receive

Court ruling punishes gun makers

I was very disappointed to learn of the recent court ruling in Maryland that allows residents of that state to sue manufacturers of "small, cheap" handguns. It makes about as much sense as suing a tree because someone used a wooden club to attack someone else.

The ruling also applies to distributors and retail sellers of small handguns. So I suppose they should be able to sue local car dealers because one of the vehicles they sold was used to run down a pedestrian. It seems rather unfair to me that an innocent firearms dealer can be sued because of extraneous circumstances that he had no control over.

What disturbs me most about this ruling is how far it could be taken. If they can sue gun makers for making guns, even though an extremely small percentage were used in crimes, why can't they sue makers of knives, scissors, neckties, etc? I realize that may sound ludicrous, but all of those items have been used as murder weapons at one time or another and theoretically the list could go on

My point here is that our legal system is prosecuting the wrong party. It requires a human being to manipulate all of the above items into murder weapons, without which they are simply harmless objects. We should focus our view on the people who carry out the crimes and not the object they use to do

So perhaps, instead of suing gun makers, we should stop allowing first-degree murderers to be back on the street in seven years or less. Maybe the fear of capital punishment or mandatory life imprisonment without parole would serve as the best deterrent to crime in reality.

Israelis terrorize

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR pertaining to matters of public interest are en-

Editor,

Why does the United States continue to support the Israelis? The recent bombing of the Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters in Tunisia was just another example of the violent, warlike nature of people who apparently won't rest until they have completed their genocide against the Palestinians.

In this month's bombing of the PLO headquarters, the Israelis used eight U.S.-made F-16 jet fighters to fly 1,500 miles (refueling twice in air) to bomb a target in another country. For those who don't know where Tunisia is, it's to the southwest of Italy on the southern shore of the Mediterranean. That's quite a way to fly for a country that received $50 million in "emergency" aid from the United States last spring.

The United States declared war on Japan when that country bombed Pearl Harbor, yet we treat this violent Israeli act with indifference and, in fact, we have justified it.

The Palestinians are being criticized for their acts of terrorism, but they have few alternatives. They were expelled from their homes in the late 1940s when Israel was "created" and were put in temporary detention camps which still exist today. The Palestinians have no country of their own now and are kept out of the peace talks. Palestinians in the Gaza Strip are born and die behind barbed wire and under the uncaring eye of their Israeli guards.

I realize that there are other sides to the Mideast situation (political, social, racial and religious), but if we are going to criticize PLO terrorism, we must also criticize the aggressive behavior of our "good friends,"

Petition expresses political beliefs

Editor,

Although I respect the beliefs of Alvin Compaan, professor of physics, and Talat Rahman, assistant professor of physics, I cannot agree with their drafting of a petition pledging "neither to solicit nor accept Strategic Defense Initiative funds." These people are robbing K-State of a great chance to bring prestige and respectability to our campus in the area of research.

Their opposition to Star Wars research is based on political beliefs that seem to be clouded with the reason that this would cause problems within the departments available to receive funding.

'Star Wars funding is likely to blur the distinction between classified and unclassified research and lead to restrictions of academic freedom at K-State." But don't their true reasons for opposition to Star Wars stem from their personal political beliefs? Compaan's and Rahman's beliefs that the Star Wars will cause a "build up of offensive missiles by the Soviet Union, jeopardize our existing satellite surveillance system, violate existing arms control agreements, stalemate current strategic arms negotiations and consequently accelerate the nuclear arms race while undermining our national security" can easily be refuted. The Strategic Defense Initiative is an antinuclear system that will destroy ballistic missiles and when proven effective, will make nuclear weapons obsolete. With this vital research will come the elimination of nuclear war once Star Wars is operative.

Political beliefs aside, K-State should encourage research in areas that will bring respect and prestige to our campus and at the same time offer students of the sciences an improved and much more diverse

Workshop to 'stress' alternative

By The Collegian Staff

With the focus of publicity on the physical aspects of the Manhattan Downtown Redevelopment Program — including eminent domain and condemnation proceedings by the city — the stress to individuals caused by these actions often can be overlooked.

In an effort to address the mental health needs of individuals affected by the project, a workshop, cosponsored by the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce and Pawnee Mental Health Services, has been scheduled for 7 p.m. Oct. 23 at the Manhattan Public Library, Juliette and Poyntz avenues.

The workshop, titled "Coping with Change in Downtown Redevelopment," is being designed to deal with the mental health and stress-related needs of employers, their employees and families affected by the changes caused by the redevelopment.

Wendy Schiappa, a representative of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said the idea for the workshop came from Gordon Peterson of Pawnee Mental Health. She said the workshop was free to all individuals affected by the downtown redevelopment program and the Chamber would pay all costs involved.

Programs for the workshop include how to cope with transition and change; the organizing and using of support groups; and a one-time, confidential assessment and referral session for participants.

Individuals interested in attending should call Peterson at 539-5337 or the Chamber office at 776-8829.

Senate to consider deadline

Bill details final allocations

By the Collegian Staff

Student Senate will hear first reading of a bill detailing final allocations for University groups and will consider a change in the Student Bond Refinancing Ad Hoc Committee recommendation deadline at their meeting tonight in the Union Big Eight room.

The final allocations legislation, sponsored by Senate Finance Committee, includes the committee's recommendations for final allocations for several University groups. The matter was first discussed last spring.

The committee is also making three special recommendations for allocations, said Mark Galyardt, senior in industrial engineering and finance committee chairman.

The special recommendations include: $63 for Engineering Council members to travel to Purdue University for a national convention; $520 for Public Relations Student Society of America for that group to attend a national convention in Detroit; and a tentative allocation of $324.80 for Students Against Multiple Sclerosis.

The ad hoc committee bill changes the Oct. 24 deadline for the committee's recommendation on what senate should do with the $700,000 which became available to students through refinancing of student bonds. The bill states the committee will present a progress report about its actions by Oct. 24, but does not give a new deadline for the committee's recommendations.

Students aid in University upkeep

By KENNETH GAILLIARD Contributing Writer

Broken pipes, gas leaks, apartment floods — minor repairs and emergencies — are under control at residence halls and food service centers with the help of six trouble-shooters.

The trouble-shooters — technically called Student Emergency Repair Technicians — await emergency calls seven days a week from students in need of help.

These individuals provide a service for married students in Jardine Terrace Apartments, students living in Evans Apartments and residence halls.

"What we do, in our off hours, is give housing maintenance a hand. We fix a problem if we can, or we isolate the problem and call regular housing maintenance people in to do the repairs," said Jon Lane, a trouble-shooter and senior in accounting.

SERTs work on an "on-call basis" and are required to be available year-round, including weekends and holidays. Functioning as a support crew, trouble-shooters have saved the University money by catching maintenance problems early and taking measures to prevent excessive damage.

Trouble-shooters also help the Department of Housing save money that would otherwise be used to bring in regular maintenance workers for emergency night calls.

Richard Brenner, housing maintenance assistant supervisor, said not all calls that come in at night are emergencies and it's too costly to call in a full-time maintenance person for every call.

SERTs are trained by full-time maintenance workers in plumbing, electrical and general maintenance work applicable to the machinery in the food centers and residence halls. On weekends the trouble-shooters check mechanical rooms in campus buildings to monitor equipment operations.

Students own their own equipment, but have access to the housing department's equipment and supplies if needed.

"These guys are truly dedicated people, they stay through breaks and over the summer, and they work very hard. The pay isn't great, but we try to schedule the hours so that they can make enough money to pay their expenses and still have something left over. We haven't had many people quit," Brenner said.

"If a student quits, more pressure is put on the other members of the crew but we just ride it out, either to the next semester or the summer."

In the early 1970s, the idea of incorporating student technicians into the housing system was brought forth by Lloyd Davenport, former director of housing. Tom Frith, current housing director, said the program was started because the University's maintenance staff lived so far away, making it difficult to take care of after-hours repairs.

Two winners of Nobel modify drug research

By The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Two Americans whose work in determining molecular structure has been used to develop hundreds of modern drugs won the 1985 Nobel Prize for chemistry Wednesday.

Americans Herbert Hauptman and Jerome Karle are both physicists, but Nobel officials took the exceptional step of awarding them the chemistry prize because their work in finding a method to determine crystal structure has become indispensable to chemists.

Three other Americans have won Nobel Prizes this year. Dr. Michael S. Brown and Dr. Joseph Goldstein received the Nobel Prize in medicine for discoveries about cholesterol, and Franco Modigliani won the Nobel Prize in economics for pioneering theories of personal finance. The Nobel Peace Prize was awarded to an anti-war organization, International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War, that is led by U.S. and Soviet doctors.

Hauptman was swimming at a YMCA in Buffalo, N.Y., when he received a telephone call from a colleague telling him the news. "I'm still numb. I was terribly surprised. I still can't believe it," Hauptman said.

Karle's wife and scientific collaborator, Isabella Karle, said she wasn't sure her husband, who was aboard a trans-Atlantic flight to Washington, D.C., from West Germany, had heard the news.

Nobel officials credited Hauptman and Karle with working out equations and procedures for use by scientists trying to analyze crystal structure through radiation.

"Almost all we know about the structure of molecules is a result of this method," said Ingvar Lindqvist, a Nobel chemistry juror who said Hauptman and Karle had found an "ultimate" method, which would not be improved.

Karle, 67, is director of research at the Laboratory for Structure of Matter at the U.S. Naval Research Laboratory in Washington, D.C. Hauptman, 68, is director of research at the Medical Foundation of Buffalo in Buffalo, N.Y.

Lindqvist told journalists that the two formulated their technique in the 1950s but their work generally was not thought to be especially important at the time.

But when their work was used with computers, he said, it proved "indispensable" and now lets scientists determine in a few weeks molecular structures which once could have taken a year to figure out.

Jim Holenbeck, owner of Deep Creek Custom Made Boots and Saddles.

The Business of Boots

Working from a small shop located just a few steps from his home in the Flint Hills, Holenbeck puts the finishing touches on a pair of boots.

sk any true cowpoke, and he'll be the first to say that a good pair of boots means more than just foot pro-

It all has to do with style, comfort, eye appeal and - more than anything - quality.

In a small shop in the Flint Hills east of Manhattan, the quality for which so many search, and often have trouble finding, is represented in the handcrafted boots by Jim Holenbeck, owner and operator of Deep Creek Custom Made Boots and Saddles.

While spending over 40 hours of labor on each pair of boots. Holenbeck caters to people across the nation who are interested in paying the price for something other than factory-made apparel.

"I do everything by hand - by myself," Holenbeck said as he set a pair of "just finished" boots on his work table.

"Here's a pair I made for a guy out in Utah. He's a car salesman and spends a lot of time walking around on cement. I put soles on that would have more give in them," he said.

The tan-colored boots he spoke of were different in comparison to the average store-bought boots. On the side of each, were the initials of the buyer - set apart with different type Buying custom boots gives the purchaser the advantage of having his choice of leather and styling on his boots. The price of the boot greatly depends on the type of leather used, Holenbeck said.

The least expensive boots are made from the American Bison, which, all depending on the detailing requested, cost a minimum of $350. On the other side of the scale, a pair of ostrich boots could cost over $750, also depending on the extra detailing.

Other popular leathers come from such exotic animals as the kangaroo, shark, elephant, alligator, snake or whatever the customer prefers, Holenbeck said.

"Leathers are imported from all over," he said. "France probably sends over the best leather, mainly because they don't brand their animals and they're not subjected to barb wire."

When making his boots, Holenbeck first requires the owner to be measured in person, to make sure he can get the perfect fit most people expect when buying a pair of custommade boots.

After measuring, Holenbeck develops a "boot last" for each foot. The "last" is a wooden block resembling the shape of each foot and is the structure around which the boot is built.

"'Last' comes first in boot making," Holenbeck said. "If it doesn't fit the foot, they might as well buy them from a factory.

"Some people have one foot larger than the other," he added. "I can make a boot to fit each foot specifically.

"The man from Utah has a foot one-half inch longer than the other and for years he's had to tolerate factory-made boots that are made the same. Now he dosen't have to worry about that."

Once the "last" is made and the leather selected and cut, the vamp, the leather surrounding the foot, can be stitched onto the front upper panel which surrounds the ankle. The boot, now inside out during stitching, can be side-seamed, connecting the front and back panels.

Once the stitching is completed, the boot can be turned right-side out and stretched around the "last" with pliers, to create the ideal fit for the customer. The welt, or a leather piece holding the boot together, is then hand sewn into the boot. Before the sole is added to the boot, an arch support and toe box are installed to give the boot form and support around the toes and instep.

When the boots are complete, they can be sent to the customer in hope of a perfect fit.

"So far I haven't had to refit anyone," Holenbeck said. "As my reputation builds, so should my sales as long as I'm making good quality boots." Besides boots, Holenbeck also makes saddles, belts, shoes or almost anything that could be constructed out of leather.

"I'm two months behind on custom orders right now, but when I do run into a dry time, the repair work that people bring in will keep me going," Holenbeck said.

Holenbeck does all of his work in a one-room shop in front of his house. The smell of leather hits the senses upon entering the building and seems to match the autumn setting which surrounds the Deep Creek area. "I like working back here," Holenbeck said. "It's peaceful and quiet - I can get more done."

Before moving to his current location in 1983, Holenbeck worked in both Texas and Utah for several boot and saddle companies. He returned to Kansas to be near his hometown, Alma, where he helps his father run a cattle operation part time.

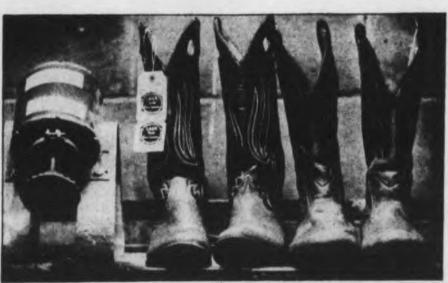

When Holenbeck isn't helping out the family, he's perfectly content at home, working in his shop.

"I really can't think of anything else I'd rather be doing than making boots," he said.

"And as long as I'm making a good enough custom boot - I'll make my share.'

A simple sign is all that indicates the location of his business.

A couple pair of boots await repair in Holenbeck's shop.

Film evokes stark imagery

By GARY JOHNSON Collegian Reviewer

"Stranger Than Paradise," winner of the Camera d'Or prize at Cannes Film Festival in 1984, turns the traditional American Dream upside down. It isn't a movie about the rise to success, the drive of ambition. Instead it's about the lack of desire. It's about people who get money only when they need it, who accept life as it is instead of trying to change things.

Film Review

Director/writer Jim Jarmusch doesn't believe in the vision of America depicted by Hollywood and TV. For him, that vision is artificial, an America created to excite us into buying more products, to trick us into believing in the American Dream.

In "Stranger Than Paradise" Jarmusch creates an America where there is a flatness in tone wherever you go. New York looks like Cleveland which looks like Florida. It's all part of an industrial landscape, shrouded in a pallor so stark it's as if the fallout from an atomic war were gently drifting to earth.

But at the same time that he has made America so stark and barren, he's created a vision that is strangely beautiful. It's an ugly America, but it's also evocative never sensual, but neither is it repulsive. Everything lies between, where there is little, if any, variety.

The hero is Willie. He has lived in New York for the past 10 years, after immigrating from Hungary. Now he wants to reject everything from his past. He isn't too interested in working. He'd rather spend his time betting on the horses or playing poker. His best friend, Eddie, is just as ambitious. Neither of them is headed anywhere and that doesn't faze them in the slightest.

Then entering their lives is Eva, Willie's cousin from Hungary. She has just arrived in New York and needs some help getting on her feet. She's more intelligent than both men combined. She doesn't have many ambitions either, but she does have a strong will. She makes decisions and does things.

But Eva's stay with Willie is only a stopover before she'll go to live with her aunt in Cleveland. So after Eva's been gone for a year, Willie and Eddie decide to visit her one day after they've made a killing at a poker game. And after kicking around in Cleveland for awhile, they talk Eva into going to Florida

"Stranger Than Paradise" then becomes a road movie of sorts, but it's a road movie that never really goes anywhere. And that's by design. The big question ends up being, will anything ever really happen to these people? Jarmusch toys with our expectations, giving us the semblance of a plot and conflict, but he defies where conventions say the movie should

The movie is so strange and deadpan that it becomes charming in its own sort of twisted fashion. It doesn't work all the time, however. For instance, the drive to Cleveland is a dull as a real drive to Cleveland. But most of the time, Jarmusch's characters are engaging in their own stylized

Beatles-tribute band to stage British-invasion-era concert

By LINDA SCHMIDT Arts and Entertainment Editor

Music of 20 years ago will saturate Union Forum Hall Sunday night when the band "1964" - a recreation of the Beatles in concert takes the audience on a musical tour through nostalgia.

The show, which begins at 7:30 p.m. is sponsored by Union Program

Council's Special Events Committee. "1964" has evolved over the past two years when the musicians "tired out of playing Top-40," said Mark Benson, who portrays John Lennon. "Then we came together in the exact same order as the Beatles," he said. "It's uncanny. We even had a drummer before this one," referring to the Beatles' replacement of Pete Best with Ringo Starr.

"We're not trying to be the Beatles," Benson said. "We're trying to re-create a Beatles concert. "We're trying to be the best we can be from the moment we go on stage to the moment we go off," Benson said. "And then in the dressing rooms we can slide off and become Show era and The Beatles' touring years of 1964 to 1966, he said.

"At every concert immediately the people are reacting," Benson said. "They sort of become a kid again. And the audience has no age limit. They're there from 7 years old to 70 years old. It's fabulous," he said.

The families of the Beatles have been responsive to "1964" since their debut. Yoko Ono, Lennon's widow, sent a Christmas card last year that was positive, Benson said.

In June, the band's public relations director Robin Brooks said she invited George Harrison's sister Louise to a show in Florida. "She (Louise) said she was hysterical all night and threw a private party for them afterwards. She was so totally positive, she said the concert was a joy'," Brooks said.

Benson, 31, has made three of the five guitars used by "1964" and has portrayed John Lennon in two Beatles tribute bands since June 1981. He also worked with Gary Grimes in the group BOCK in the

The newest member of "1964," 32-year-old Greg George, portrays Ringo. In addition to his physical resemblance, his authencity goes as far as being left-handed. In the mid-70s he worked with Tom Work in a group, Dogs 'n Kids.

Tom Work, 30, joined Benson and Grimes in May 1983 in a Beatles tribute act, "Revolver."

Memories came to life for Alistair Taylor, former president of Apple Records, at a Beatles convention in March 1984. During a performance by "1964," Taylor, standing in the back of the room, shook his head and left the room, Benson said. After the performance, Taylor told Benson that for a minute he was back in time and found himself looking around the room for old friends.

"He had tears in his eyes," Benson

Sundberg's 4 RBIs send Royals to 6-2 win

By The Associated Press

TORONTO - The Kansas City Royals, the team that would not quit, completed a stunning turnaround Wednesday night by beating the Toronto Blue Jays 6-2 behind Jim Sundberg's four RBIs to win the decisive seventh game of the American League playoffs and advance to the World Series.

The victory set up an all-Missouri, Show-Me Showdown in the World Series starting Saturday night in Kansas City between the Royals and the St. Louis Cardinals, who won the National League pennant earlier Wednesday by beating Los Angeles Thus ended Canada's hopes for the first World Series outside the United States.

In any other year since divisional playoffs began in 1969, Toronto would have won, three games to one. But this year, for the first time, it was a best-of-seven format, not best-offive, and the Royals took full advantage of the extra two games.

Sundberg finished the series with a team-high six RBIs, one more than teammate George Brett, the playoff Most Valuable Player who had eight hits including three home runs in 23

|Clark's homer gives Cardinals 7-5 victory

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - Jack Clark, acquired in the offseason to put some power in a lineup built on speed, hit a three-run home run with two out in the ninth inning to give the St. Louis a 7-5 victory over Los Angeles Wednesday, sending the Cardinals into their 14th World Series.

Twice, the Cardinals fought back from deficits to beat the Dodgers in the sixth game of the National League playoffs for the right to meet the Kansas City Royals, 6-2 winners over Toronto in Game 7 of the American League playoffs.

The Cardinals thus completed a four-game sweep of the Dodgers after losing the first two games.

Ozzie Smith, the playoff's Most Valuable Player who had won the fifth game with a ninth-inning homer, capped a three-run seventh with a run-scoring triple that tied the score 4-4, but the Dodgers regained the lead on a lead-off homer by Mike Marshall in the eighth.

Facing the Dodgers' ace reliever. Tom Niedenfuer, the Cardinals started their winning rally with one out in the ninth on a single by Willie McGee, who came into the game with only four hits in 21 playoff at-

McGee stole second and Niedenfuer then walked Smith, whose ninth-inning homer in Game 5 had beaten the Dodgers relief pitcher.

A bouncing ball to first by Tommy Herr sent the runners to second and third, and Clark, the Cardinals' cleanup hitter, hit the first pitch deep into the left field stands as Dodgers outfielder Pedro Guerrero watched helplessly.

Guerrero threw his mitt to the ground in disgust and the Cardinals poured out of their dugout to welcome Clark, who had only one previous RBI in the series.

The hit put the Cardinals in only their second World Series since divisional play was instituted in 1969. The Cardinals won the 1982 World Series over Milwaukee in seven games.

The winning pitcher Wednesday was rookie right-hander Todd Worrell, who gave up Marshall's eight-inning homer, and left-hander Ken Dayley pitched the ninth inning to save it for the Cardinals.

4th-ranked Nebraska too much for K-State

K-State had 17 kills on 76 attempts with six errors for the match. The team attacking percentage for the Wildcats was 14 percent.

"Nebraska is the No. 1 offensive match, but fell short on each occasion

University plans pep rally following football practice

By The Collegian Staff

A pep rally for K-State's football team has been planned for 5:15 p.m. today in KSU Stadium following the Wildcats' last practice before facing the University of Kansas Jayhawks Saturday in Lawrence.

The KSU Marching Band, K-State cheerleaders and Willie the Wildcat will be on hand at the rally, according to Stanley Finck, assistant professor of music and band director. All students, faculty and staff and K-State supporters are welcome to attend the rally. A large crowd is expected.

"It's the kind of thing we hope will give the football team a shot in the arm and to not give up because we (K-State fans) haven't," said Kenny Mossman, administrative assistant in the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and organizer of the runs, his second-highest total of the season.

Today's football practice is closed to the public but the stadium gates will be opened around 5 p.m., said Head Coach Lee Moon.

Kansas City starter Bret Saberhagen, winner Charlie Leibrandt and Dan Quisenberry, who got the final two outs, gave the Royals the clutch pitching they needed for the third straight game.

In the final three games of the series, Toronto stranded 26 runners, 17 in scoring position. The Blue Jays, who hit just a shade under .300 with runners in scoring position during the regular season, stranded nine runners in their final game of the year, including six in scoring posi-

Saberhagen, the Royals ace and one of only two 20-game winners in the American League, was forced to leave after three innings. He bruised his pitching hand in the first inning while trying to grab an infield hit by Willie Upshaw. There was no immediate indication whether Saberhagen would be available for the World Series.

Leibrandt, who started and lost Games 1 and 4, inherited a 2-0 lead. He went 51/3 innings, allowing a fifthinning, run-scoring double to Upshaw among his five hits. After Barfield singled with one out and went to third on a double by Tony Fernandez, Quisenberry entered the game.

Quisenberry gave up a run-scoring grounder to Damaso Garcia and then got Lloyd Moseby on a grounder to second to end the game.

Sundberg, just 2-for-20 in the postseason entering the game, singled home a run in the second inning.

This was a contest settled between the bullpens of the two teams. Dodgers starter Orel Hershiser worked 61/3 innings and the St. Louis starter, Joaquin Andujar, went six innings, neither pitching very effectively.

Hershiser beat Andujar in Game 2 in Los Angeles, but that was the last game the Dodgers would win in this series. The Cardinals swept three at home, winning 4-2, 12-2 and 3-2 before returning to Los Angeles for what would be the final game of the playoffs.

Hershiser gave up a run in the third, then was chased in the seventh after McGee's two-run single. Andujar gave up runs in the first and second innings, and Bill Madlock's solo homer, his third of the playoffs, capped a two-run fifth.

Besides his home run, Madlock also drove in a run with a single, and Mariano Duncan had three hits, an RBI and scored twice for the Dodgers.

In the Cardinal seventh, Smith drove in the tying run in a dramatic rematch against Niedenfuer. Smith had hit the first left-handed home run of his career to beat Niedenfuer and the Dodgers in the bottom of the ninth inning in Game 5.

Darrell Porter and Tito Landrum got the Cardinals' seventh going with consecutive singles off Hershiser. A bouncer to first by pinch-hitter Steve Braun advanced the runners, and McGee, who came into the game with just four hits in 21 playoff atbats, punched a two-run single up the middle, chasing Hershiser.

"It's geared more toward people not familiar with Aggieville," Kuhn said. "It shows the middle-aged and parents what (the Aggieville night spots) are like inside."

Kuhn also said the tour can give parents and others in the community an idea of what students are doing inside the Aggieville establishments.

Participants are formed into groups, with a tour leader, who escorts them to various locations for a set time period. Kuhn said the group members are given "a small sample at some of the spots."

Persons wanting to go on the tour should make reservations by calling 539-9794 or 537-8482. Tours start at 7 p.m. from Kite's, at a cost per participant of $1.

Fans meet Royals at KCI, offer congratulations

AL pennant gives cause for 'party'

By TODD NIGHSWONGER Sports Editor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - There was a party Thursday at Kansas City International airport and all of Kansas City was invited.

The guests of honor were the American League champion Kansas City Royals, who the night before won their second AL pennant with a 6-2 win over the Toronto Blue Jays. Kansas City will play the St. Louis Cardinals in the World Series, which begins Saturday night in Royals Stadium.

Fans of all ages were on hand at KCI's Gate 31 to welcome home the Royals. The crowd, estimated to be around 1,000, held up signs and wore royal blue to greet the Royals as they returned from Toronto.

The boisterous crowd - which began forming about noon - yelled chants of "Here we go Royals, here we go" and "We want the Royals" while waiting for the TWA chartered flight that carried the Royals entourage.

The plane landed just after 2 p.m. and soon after Kansas City Manager Dick Howser emerged from the exit ramp, bringing an uproar from the crowd. Signs making such claims as "Cards are red, Royals are blue, K.C. is No. 1, St. Lou No. 2" and "Welcome home No.

1 Royals" waved in the air. Children got on their parents' shoulders to get a better view of the players. Others stood on ticket counters or got a view from a stairway above. Most, however, could barely see any of the Royals. But it didn't matter. Just being there was enough. Rose Farris of Kansas City was one of the many who had a poor view of the Royals as they entered the airport terminal. Farris alleviated the problem by using her 6-year-old son, J.P., as her "eyes."

"He sat on my shoulders and said who was coming through because I couldn't see," she said. Even though just 6 years old, J.P. knew each of the player's names as they passed by.

Ship crisis leads Craxi to abdicate

By The Associated Press

ROME - Premier Bettino Craxi resigned Thursday, his coalition shattered by the way he handled the ship hijacking crisis, and he went down swinging at the United States for its "polemical tone" in the affair.

In a statement to Parliament, the Socialist premier accused Washington, D.C., of making statements "which I believe derive from an incomplete evaluation of the facts and circumstances in which the Italian government acted."

The fate of Italy's 44th postwar government, which in another month would have been the longest-lived, was sealed Wednesday by the resignations of Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini and two other Cabinet members from his Republican Party.

They quit over the decision to release Mohammed Abbas, a PLO official the United States accuses of directing the hijacking last week of the cruise liner Achille Lauro. Leon Klinghoffer, a 69-year-old American passenger, was killed while Palestinian pirates controlled the

KSDB might gain listeners from KAKE-TV's donation

By LEANNE STOWE Staff Writer

KSDB-FM has the opportunity to become a major attraction to regional listeners thanks to a donation from a Wichita television KAKE-TV, Wichita, donated a 200-foot tower and transmission site to the studentoperated campus radio station. Lee Buller, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said the station could see an increase in potential listeners from 32,000 that it can reach in Manhattan to 128,000 it will reach with the new site.

The tower and site, built in 1968 by KAKE, encompass 40,000 square feet of land. The television station has converted to cable and plans to completely discontinue transmission to the area, thus not needing the tower. The site will become available to KSDB by the end of the year.

Buller said the site is 11/2 miles southeast of Manhattan on K-177 on the east side of the highway. The transmission facility includes a small building, satellite dish and the tower,

The donation will save the station the $75,000 to $100,000, the cost of purchasing a site comparable to this one, Buller said.

He said his goal now is to collect funding to make the needed modifications to the site. He said the cost of the changes would be $2,000 to $3,000.

Buller said needed modifications include work to make a dish at the site compatible and receptive to the KSDB signal. He said this work will need to be completed before KSDB can use the site.

"We've applied for some of the $700,000 of student money in refinanced bonds" to finance the modification, Buller said. "It's an opportunity for KSDB to become a showcase among student-run radio stations."

Buller said it all started when he was contacted on Oct. 11 by Rob Dalton, president and general manager of Chronicle Broadcasting (KAKE) in Wichita, about the donation of the site.

"He (Dalton) said they were thinking of ending transmission here and getting the tower was between us and KU," Buller said. "KU is interested in expanding their coverage out here, but Dalton said they believed in localism (allowing the local radio station representation before non-local competitors) so they would give it to us."

Buller said the tower, near "K" hill, is 200 feet high - making the transmitting elevation 300 feet higher than the KSDB antennas on top of McCain Auditorium.

"Right now we are broadcasting 38 feet below the average terrain (most hills surrounding the city)," Buller said. "This tower is 300 feet higher than we are now."

In addition to the increase in audience and tower height, Buller said the station has applied for an increase in wattage. 'Our watts will increase from 125 to 1,500

watts," he said. "This will allow us to cover See KSDB, Page 12

State income below expectations

General fund short $22.4 million

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The outlook for Kansas' revenue situation is poor, according to a state financial expert who told lawmakers Thursday to expect a sharp reduction in projections of state income during the remainder of the fiscal year.

The Legislative Budget Committee was told that tax-generated revenues flowing into the state's general fund bank account are nearly $5.5 million short of expert estimates and likely will be revised down much further when a a group of financial experts meet next month.

The 1985 fiscal year ended June 30 with general fund receipts $22.4 million below estimates and the downward slide continued into the current 1986 fiscal year, said Richard Ryan, director of legislative research and a member of the panel of experts, called the consensus revenue estimating group.

A sluggish economy and delay in the economic recovery reaching Kansas have been blamed for the shortfalls. And the disappointing income totals are not even half of the $47 million shortfall which occurred at the end of Fiscal Year 1982 and caused Gov. John Carlin to order across-the-board 4 percent reductions in spending by state agencies

However, the revenue problem is serious enough to have lawmakers scrambling to find places to cut the state budget and there was lengthy discussion by the committee about possible reductions.

For purposes of discussion, Ryan distributed a document prepared by the governor's budget office which tries to

Architect criticizes coliseum plans

By MARY ROEHL Collegian Reporter

Student Senate heard comments on the importance of a feasibility study for the Fred Bramlage Coliseum at its weekly meeting

Robert Jackson, professor of architecture, spoke during open period about the importance of planning when designing a building such as the coliseum. Until the problem has been defined, a good building can not be built, he said.

There was no long-range planning for the coliseum, Jackson said. Since K-State is going to pay for it out of its own purse, it should be a building people will use.

"Is there a need for a coliseum, and if so, how big should it be?" Jackson said. "The only need I have read or heard was that we want something bigger than (the University of Kansas)."

Jackson said from the beginning, there was never a master plan to show a real need for a new coliseum, a financial feasibility study or a funding study to see if the money could be raised.

"I think the planning here is backward," Jackson said. "We're in a mess today because we've had bad planning."

Jackson said senate should spend the money to have a market study done to find out if there is a need for a new coliseum.

Senate passed unanimously the Establishment of the Student Bond Refinancing Ad hoc Committee bill. The bill changes the Oct. 24 deadline to present recommendations for the use of the $700,000 which became available through refinancing of student bonds. The bill states that a progress report for the use of the money must be made by Oct. 24.

Senate also heard first readings on three special allocations recommendations. The

Unique writing wins writer Nobel

STOCKHOLM, Sweden -- Novelist Claude Simon, whose complex style has kept his work from becoming well known even in his native France, won the Nobel Prize for literature Thursday. Simon, 72, became the 12th French writer to win the prestigious award and the first since 1964, when existentialist author and playwright Jean-Paul Sartre declined to accept his award. The Swedish Academy said it had been watching Simon's work ever since he became known as an exponent in the late 1950s of the French "nouveau roman," or "new novel" style, which did away with conventional concepts of narrative structure, plot and character

The academy said in its citation that Simon's novels, many of which draw on his experiences with the Republican side in the Spanish Civil War and as a cavalry officer in World War II, combine "the poet's and the painter's creativeness with a deepened awareness of time in the depiction of the human condition."

Simon now spends most of his time growing wine grapes on the slopes of the Pyrenees in Salses in southern France.

His editor, Jerome Lindon of the Editions Minuit publishing company, told The Associated Press by telephone from Simon's home that "Claude Simon...is very touched by the honor bestowed upon him."

Lindon said "it is unlikely" Simon will make a public statement. He said when the author heard on the radio that he'd won the prize he "wasn't surprised because he was a contender two years ago, and because there were television crews outside his home early this morning."

Amtrack train accident injures 60

THAYER, Iowa - A freight train sideswiped Amtrak's Zephyr on Thursday night, breaking windows and injuring 60 people, authorities

Most of the injuries to those aboard the train headed for California from Chicago were believed to be minor, said Jo Duckworth, a dispatcher with the Union County sheriff's department.

The accident involving the Zephyr and the eastbound Burlington Northern freight train occurred at 8:55 p.m. CDT. There were 307 passengers and 16 crewmembers aboard the Amtrak train, according to an Amtrak spokesman in Washington.

An object from the freight train either fell out or protruded far enough to strike the Amtrak train, Duckworth said.

Judge sentences driver for fatality

OSKALOOSA - A Topeka man was sentenced Thursday to two years in the Jefferson County Jail on charges stemming from a fatal traffic accident.

Loren L. Smith Jr., 19, had pleaded no contest Sept. 4 to charges of vehicular homicide, driving under the influence of alcohol and driving after his license was suspended.

Officials said he was the driver of a car which struck an oncoming vehicle on Kansas 4 on May 18. A passenger, James Broxterman, 21, also of Topeka, was killed.

Smith was sentenced Thursday by Associate Jefferson County District Judge Gary L. Nafziger. The judge ordered a one-year jail sentence on the vehicular homicide charge, to be served consecutively with two concurrent one-year terms on the other two charges. Smith was also fined $500 for driving under the influence and $100 for driving after his license was suspended.

Nebraska man gets murder charge

MANKATO - A Nebraska man has been charged with attempted first-degree murder and aggravated burglary in connection with an Oct. 6 break-in at a Mankato residence.

Jewell County Attorney Darrell Miller said the charges were filed Wednesday against Richard Surratt, 32, of Fairbury, Neb. Judge William Thompson ordered Miller held under $300,000 bond.

Authorities said Surratt blasted his way into the home of Bob Newell with a shotgun on the night of Oct. 6 by shooting off a front door lock. Newell was struck in the shoulder by a shotgun blast as he walked down the steps of his house and returned the fire with a handgun, striking Surratt in the abdomen and hand, investigators said.

WASHINGTON - Scientists working on the Pentagon's strategic defense program last week successfully demonstrated, for the second time, the U.S. ability to fire a high-quality laser beam from a ground station to an object in space, the Defense Department said Thursday. In a test over the Pacific Ocean on Oct. 10, beams from two lasers located at an Air Force facility on Maui, Hawaii, were received by a Terrier-Malemute rocket that reached an altitude of over 400 miles after a flight time of 10 minutes.

The first test was conducted on Sept. 27. The purpose of the tests is to demonstrate that laser beams can be fired through the atmosphere without being blocked or distorted by the atmosphere. In the latest experiment, the beam was recorded on equipment aboard the rocket and monitored by scientists on the

State wants no millionaire courses

PHOENIX, Ariz. - State officials have filed suit to block a company from offering $4,500 courses on how to become millionaires and force him to pay more than $9 million in restitution and penalties. A suit alleging consumer-fraud and racketeering violations was filed Tuesday against James Tolleson, a target of prior criminal civil actions by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. Also named in the suit were Success Education Training Co. of Phoenix and two people identified as helping Tolleson run it.

The suit claims the defendants sold Future Millionaireship Courses, consisting of 350 hours of tape-recorded lectures, to at least 2,000 customers for $4,500 apiece and promised them they could make $100,000 within three months or get their money back.

Reagan offers reward for hijackers

WASHINGTON - The United States on Thursday publicly identified for the first time three Lebanese Shiites it wants in connection with the hijacking of a TWA jetliner and murder of an American

Just hours earlier, the Reagan administration offered a reward of up to a quarter-million dollars as a bounty for the trio and Attorney General Edwin Meese said the government would make "a determined, coordinated effort" to punish them.

"We just decided to go public with this now," Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten, when asked why the names of the suspects were being released.

The arrest warrants and criminal complaints actually had been issued in U.S. District Court here on July 3, just a few days after the passengers of TWA Flight 847, including nearly 40 Americans, were released by their captors who were demanding the release of prisoners held by Israel.

Salad lovers' relief for sulfite reaction found by new test

By COLLEEN WILSON Staff Writer

For salad bar lovers who react to sulfite preservatives, relief may be on the way.

Sulfite, a preservative used by some restaurants to prevent browning and bad taste in many foods, is put "on almost everything in salad bars."

Of the 10 million people in the United States who have asthma, 5 percent to 10 percent are sulfite sensitive, and about one of every 500 persons who don't have asthma have an allergic reaction to sulfite.

Reactions to sulfite may include dizziness, hives, headaches or asthma attacks. About four people in the United States die each year from serious reactions to sulfite.

However, Barbara Marklay, a second-year graduate student in chemistry, has developed a test strip to determine whether sulfite is present in foods as her master's thesis, "New Methods for Detection of Sulfite."

The test strip consists of aluminum sulfate with two dyes in it. If the compound on the strip turns green when it touches food, it does not contain sulfite. If it turns red, it does contain sulfite and should not be eaten be a sulfite sensitive person.

The average person consumes two to three milligrams of sulfite daily. When eating at a salad bar, a person can consume anywhere from 25 to 100 milligrams, Marklay said.

"Some people can't metabolize it (sulfite). They are lacking an enzyme in their system," she said. Marklay is one of these people.

Sulfite has been used since ancient Roman and Egyptian times, Marklay said. But its use has not been a problem until the last few years. She believes this is because more people are eating out and because of the general health kick demanding more fresh fruits and

Some restaurants use a sulfite preservative called Fresh Spud to keep lettuce from wilting, in which case, it can be kept around for about a week, Marklay said.

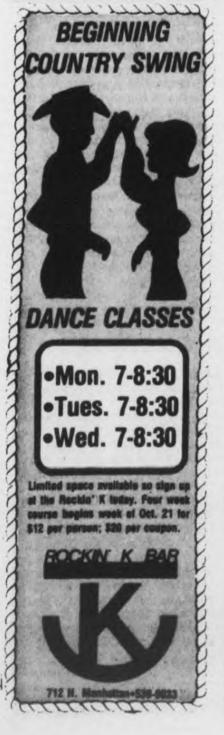

Some states have banned sulfite products, others require a sign above salad bars war ing customers that sulfite is used and others, including Kansas, use sulfite without warning.

None of the nine restaurant managers called in Manhattan said they treated their salad items with sulfite preservatives. Mary Molt, director of Derby Food Center, said the campus food services had never used the preservative and never will. Union Food Service Director Malley Sisson said they used vitamin C to keep sliced fruit from turning brown. Fruits and vegetables are not the only foods that may contain sulfite. Marklay said it is often used in dried fruits, guacamole, frozen shrimp, dehydrated potatoes, cake mixes, hard candy and some soft drinks served in restaurants. Beer and wine contain about 10 milligrams of sulfite per serving.

Marklay, who received her bachelor's degree from St. Mary's College in South Bend, Ind., discovered she had a sensitivity to sulfite her second day in Kansas. She ate at a salad bar twice at a local restaurant and reacted the second

The idea to develop a way to test foods for sulfite originated when Clifton Meloan, professor of chemistry and Marklay's research adviser, saw a program on "60 Minutes" in September 1984 on sulfite reaction in asthma victims. He thought Marklay might be interested in the project since she also reacted to sulfite.

It took Marklay from September 1984 until mid-July 1985 to develop Marklay said she now knows from experience where she can and can't eat locally. However, her mother, who also reacts to sulfite, carries test strips with her when she eats out.

"She has a great time with them," Marklay said. "She's always calling me and telling me all sorts of things

Marklay said Meloan has applied to K-State to see whether she can get a patent on her invention. She hopes to get the test strips on the market for sulfite sensitive people to use to test food before they eat it.

Marc Johnson, head of the department of agricultural economics, speaks at Thursday's "Let's Talk About It" series in the Union Courtyard.

Ag economy: riches-to-rags tale

By BRUCE NEY Staff Writer

The increased strength of the dollar, lower inflation and smaller markets combined with overproduction, have caused a drop in commodity prices, because crop buyers are no longer there as they were in the '70s, said Marc Johnson, head of the department of agricultural economics.

Johnson addressed the issue of the agricultural economy in his lecture "From Riches to Rags," during Thursday's Union Program Council "Let's Talk About It" series, in the Union courtyard.

Johnson defined the current agricultural crisis as a two-part problem - one part being an excess debt problem and the other being an income problem.

Johnson said the excess debt was generated during the "fantasy" inflation period of the '70s. Land was purchased by farmers on the basis that prices would continue upward until 1981. However, inflation dropped and land values began plummeting, to where they are currently, one-half of what they were in 1980.

A "credit problem" has occurred because the land values are below the amount owed on the land. Cuts in interest rates would make it easier for farmers to make loan payments, he said.

The Manhattan Christian College is presenting its "Fall Festival of Faith 1985," 2 p.m. Saturday.

Fall Festival of Faith is an annual event used primarily for recruiting high school students to the college.

During the Festival, students stay on campus for the weekend, interact with the school's current students and allows them to see what's available on campus, said John Poulson, director of recruitment at

Although it is used largely for recruitment, Fall Festival of Faith has more to offer, he said.

"The purpose of this weekend is for them to see who God's favorite person is, and that person is themselves," Poulson said.

Featured will be the Joe English Band and Allies in concert 7:30 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan City Auditorium, 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue. English is the former drummer and support singer for Paul McCartney and Wings.

Guest speaker will be Tony Twist, youth minister at a Christian church in Indianapolis. Twist will be speaking about three different areas of "finding favor with God" in Joliffe Hall on the MCC campus.

Registration at 2 p.m. in the Coffin Memorial Campus Center starts the activities. The registration cost of $20.00 includes three meals, housing in MCC residence halls and one ticket for the Saturday night concert.

VIP parking unnecessary

In recent weeks, power congressional priority? struggles in the nation's capital have focused on finding money for the government to pay its bills, a long-range plan for a balanced budget and an voting." acceptable farm bill.

But now another power struggle has surfaced involving Congress, the Supreme Court and foreign diplomats.

This struggle does not regard extradition treaties, arms pacts or espionage. It involves one of the most highly prized status symbols in Washington, D.C., the free VIP parking lot next to the main passenger terminal at National Airport.

The main issue is a request by 38 House members asking the Federal Aviation Administration to disallow parking to members of the Supreme Court and diplomats. The legislator's goal is to increase parking for members of Congress.

Leading the movement is Rep. Philip Crane, R-Ill., who told the FAA that the justices and ambassadors do not have the same need for convenient airport parking.

And what does Crane claim for

The representative said legislators "truly need the ready access to parking because of the unpredictable nature of the

Is Crane talking about the timing of votes or the outcome of the voting? Perhaps if all they have to do in Washington is argue about parking spaces, there is no real necessity for Congress to call

Perhaps a shuttle service could be developed, or the members of Congress could utilize existing public transportation if they do not want to walk across parking lots to reach the terminal, like those who elected them must do.

One aide to Rep. Guy Vander Jagt, R-Mich., said the reason legislators need the close parking is that "most congressmen leave at the very last minute for the airport."

In that case, a simple solution comes to mind - leave for the airport earlier, and use the time spent on arguing about parking spaces to act on legislation affecting their constituents.

Forum's poor attendance reveals message

"...One provision was conspicuous by its presence, another by its absence," Lord

John Russell once said Nothing more appropriate could have been said of student representation at the Presidential Search Committee's open forum Tuesday. The committee intended to solicit input from classified employees, students and faculty on what to look for in the next K-State president. Approximately six students attended. Two chose to speak during the time allotted to students.

The absence of dozens of concerned students came as a surprise to all involved. After all, 48 students had applied to serve in the two positions on the search committee. Student interest had been heightened by the recent Student Senate resolution asking the Board of Regents to add three more students and three more faculty representatives to the committee.

Obviously, from the number of applicants and the senate resolution, the selection of the next K-State president is not an issue about which students are apathetic. And yet, at the one forum where students had the best chance of persuading the committee to look for certain elements in a University president, students, for the most part, chose not to participate.

The students' absence in itself should be a statement to the committee. A statement that students lack confidence in the effectiveness of working within the proper administrative and bureaucratic channels a situation the next K-State president should be able to correct.

Students have good reason to be skeptical of the "system's" effectiveness. Most of students' attempts in recent years to be heard have resulted in students on the "outside" hammering away at the administrative fortress. Take Nichols Hall, for example, which was prevented from being razed by parking lot zealots only by active student protest.

And then, just last year, the proposed parking lot east of McCain Auditorium, which would have destroyed a significant portion of K-State's green space, was quashed only after students and others began to complain.

In both cases, widespread student input was not actively sought at the planning stages when, instead of loud complaints, students could have offered sound arguments to persuade against further consideration.

The biggest discouragement, though, for students trying to work within the system, occurred last year over the coliseum outcry. After 2,300 students signed a petition asking that the coliseum planning be delayed until proper studies had been completed, and after a student referendum which yeilded 64 percent in favor of delay, the administration's response was "Thank you for your input. Now we'll proceed full speed ahead."

Working within "the system" has only frustrated students in recent years. That should change. The next K-State president shouldn't wait for dissidents to visit him. He should encourage dissidence and seek dialogue with the dissenters at every opportunity.

Conspicuous by its presence was one of the student speaker's comments on what he perceives as the most important quality of the next K-State president — that of a business person — "someone who knows what the 17- and 18-year-olds want in a University."

Does such a comment truly represent what a large majority of students view as an essential presidential quality? Or does the comment reflect a smaller sector of students who are still comfortable that their views will be heard within "the system?" Only a legitimate opinion poll could answer those questions.

In any case, though, good researchers know that what's not present is just as important as what is present. With any luck, the committee gained equal insight from those who spoke as from the silence of those who did not attend.

Students pay high price

The latest studies indicate the United States is the most educated nation in the world, and by inference the most educated nation in history.

God save the world.

In the United States there are more than ample highereducation opportunities - for those who can afford it. There is even some assistance available for those who are not among the upper financial stratosphere and have the gall to still want to attend a decent university. But individuals who have no desire to begin their adulthood on the public dole often wind up on welfare anyway: no education, no job, no money. No money, no education.

Catch-22 come to life.

What then, is the national response? It's to trim a little more "fat" off the educational sacred cow, which was pretty lean from the word go. This fat takes the form of money for financial aid and work study.

What is left is gristle, and tougher than nails.

Money makes the world go 'round, and people who have little want some, people who have some want more and people without any don't exist in the tiny minds of our lawmakers. Ergo, "anyone" can afford a college education in the Grand Old Republic.

How much money is there in your pocket, right now?

Is it enough to buy one - just one - college textbook? Books average about $27.95 these days - used. How much is there in your wallet? Enough to pay a month's rent? You're living cheap at $200 a month in Manhattan.

How much folding money do you have? Can you afford a college education on your own, without government grants, loans and parental support? For those who are here to learn, this nation has determined that to mean it is time to spend a lot of money. Where does this money come from?

If you dislike taking money from your parents and want to go the loans-and-on-your-own route, you're in deep trouble.

But relax, because even if you can't afford to go to school, there is some prepster somewhere who will get an education for you, and keep this mighty nation No. 1 in education even as it pays its teachers less than garbagemen and janitors, prices its largest class of citizens right out of the market and takes those who do go to college for every penny it can.

Poor English-speaking skills should not be tolerated

Re: Catherine Sayler's column, "International students deserve toleration," in the Oct. 9 Collegian:

The recent Test of Spoken English instituted by the Board of Regents may indeed cause some students to return to their countries as a result of not passing the exam, therefore being unable to hold a teaching position and being unable to finance their American education. I sympathize with Sayler's concern for these students. I do not, however, identify with most of the reasoning she presents which argues for "toleration" of inadequate English speaking skills of an instructor.

Theories of information processing divide its primary processes into two fundamental steps: sensation (the simple detection of a stimulus like hearing speech) and perception (which occurs only when meaning can be given to that stimulus). The theories further hold that without perception, additional meaningful processing of information is difficult or impossible, and learning cannot occur. There is no question that in the classroom students can detect speech from an instructor. But to use that spoken stimulus in further mental manipulation, association, and logical thought requires that the stimulus be given meaning - an impossible situation if the student is presented with a stimulus which lacks the potential to become meaningful (a language extremely lacking in proficiency, for example). Being unable to understand the spoken language - the ability of which is basic in education - consequently costs the student time as well as financially if the class has to be retaken. This is grossly unfair to the student who spends nearly $5,000 yearly expecting to achieve a quality education.

Sayler's analogy to poetry is highly irrelevant, for the fact that poetry is a clear, meaningful stimulus is being presented. Logical thought procedes from that point, dependent on the student. Herein lies two hierarchical levels of information. Sayler's argument tries to compare two incomparables — a subordinate level (understanding speech) with a superordinate level (thinking about poetry).

I feel privileged to live in a country where those not native are free to come in, make friendships, study and research; and I, like Sayler, feel that their worldly insights are a vital addition to a student's education. Let's gain those insights in a peripheral setting, however, not in a setting that is centrally grade-dependent. In this way grades can become a reflection not of speech interpretation first and development of higher thinking levels secondarily, but primarily of the development of higher thinking abilities (an attitude toward the purpose of education apparently held by the Board of Regents as well).

Disabled students need access to campus buildings

K-State, like any other university, has its share of problems. Not enough parking, departments with little funding and faculty who should be barred from the classroom are a sample of some of the problems. However, the situation faced by students in wheelchairs every single day is inexcuseable. The accessibility of our campus is disgraceful and disgusting.

When asked to address this issue many people would unthinkingly quip, "But I see people working on campus cutting curbs, what more can we do?" We do not deny that some work is being done, but is the present level of activity enough? Statistics reveal the sorry state of affairs. Emporia State University, Wichita State University and the University of Kansas are approximately 95 percent accessible while K-State is only 60 percent accessible to those in wheelchairs.

Improvements have been made. The campus has been improved to the point where it is a good wheelchair obstacle course, with the buildings as the obstacles to go around - not through.

And others reply, "Why do we need more services for the handicapped? I hardly ever see any of them on campus." Do these people stop to consider the possibility that there are so few students with disabilities because the accessibility is so poor? With attendance down, maybe we should pay attention to the image we present to some prospective students.

Do you realize that Anderson Hall is 100 percent inaccessible to those in wheelchairs? How are these students supposed to apply for admission? Or request a transcript? Or visit our ever-communicative President Acker?

Anderson Hall is not the only shame to our campus. Kedzie and Calvin Halls are two more fine examples of our insensitivity to the needs of others. If a student in a wheelchair wants to major in journalism and mass communications then he had better not attend K-State. Kedzie is totally inaccessible and the classes. The equipment used cannot be moved to an accessible area. What about Calvin Hall? The ground floor is accessible. But it has only one room for lectures and that is usually reserved for marketing classes. How enticing does K-State sound to the handicapped students who want a higher education?

Look around you. Could a student in a wheelchair make it to your place of work? How about into your sorority, fraternity or residence hall?

The staff of Services for the Physically Limited Student Services works very hard with their limited funds and staff. Teachers go out of their way to help. But do they get any type of support or leadership from the administration? There must be some excuse for the differences between the schools in Kansas. What are the priorities of K-State? How about allocating some of that $700,000 to this cause? That reminds me...I wonder if the Fred Bramlage Coliseum will be accessible to all students?

'Expert' opinions not worth much

"Obviously" the so-called "Star Wars" defense idea is unworkable, because some "experts," including several on our own campus, have told us that it won't work. Following are a few quotes from the past made by so-called experts of those days.

Bleachers blunder may cost $1,000

This is another case of goofed-up leadership at K-State. Last weekend, a dozen employees of the Special Events Crew spent 16 hours setting up the bleachers for basketball season. Athletic Director Larry Travis and the assistant athletic director both OK'd the setup of the bleachers. However, neither realized that this left the Lady 'Cats nowhere to practice.

When Coach Matilda Willis discovered this, she immediately started griping. I can understand the fact that she was upset, but she insisted that the bleachers be taken down. The "higher-ups" agreed and we spent another five hours taking them down

Tuesday night. Now we have to set the bleachers back up in nine days. The cost of disassembling and reassembling the bleachers will be about $1,000 extra. Why couldn't the basketball team have practiced somewhere else or at another time? The men's basketball team just has to have both courts to practice on in Ahearn Field House. Why can't the Lady 'Cats use one of the courts for nine days? Or if they schedule practice a few hours later they would have both courts. Or they could use one of the courts at the Chester E. Peters

Recreational Complex.

I guess this is too much of an inconvenience for the basketball teams. It is much smarter to spend an extra $1,000 to put up the bleachers again and waste more of the students' money on something else we don't need. On a campus this size, the money could have been spent much more wisely on something worthwhile.

And then when we were taking down the bleachers Tuesday, Willis was all over our boss' case about making too much noise. This is ridiculous. It is hard not to make noise when working with large amounts of wood and metal. It is especially stupid when the bleachers are being taken down as a "favor" to the basketball team:

This is another classic display of athletic departments and athletes thinking they are top dogs. I don't think that the athletes deserve more respect than anyone else on campus. Athletes are rewarded with scholarships and crowds cheering them on. They don't need everyone to bow to their every command. This whole situation dampens my K-State pride when I know some of the things most fans never hear

Columnist should stress positive

Re: Rich Harris' column, "Novels capture ssence of nuclear peril," in the Oct. 16 Collegian:

I believe his thinking (and subsequent confusion) represents that of a majority of young Americans. He wonders if the risk of nuclear war outweighs the dangers of an openly antagonistic superpower. If he is refering solely to the Soviet Union, I must tell him the United States also initiates antagonism. (Nothing personal is meant by my letter, please try to understand.)

Harris and other moderate political thinkers hope God will end the arms race and establish the United States on top. He apparently believes the Soviet Union is responsible for political turmoil.

He is correct about the Soviets being antagonistic. They want to establish a world government (their own of course). The United States wants to rid the world of "communism" and establish democracy (our own government) worldwide. If you think that's not how it is, look a little closer.

These political tensions arise from something more fundamental. Humans feel a strange need to be in control of any given situation. If we find a means to extend our control we will use it. Things begin to go our way, and we are happy.

Individuals are born, raised and indoctrinated into larger social orders states or nations. The leaders and their followers like to feel influential because they know their beliefs are the right ones. Egocentrism and its big brother, ethnocentrism, are about to destroy our

There is a time and a place for moderate thought. But the time has come to stretch our minds and transcend our egos. We must question our patiotism - question our beliefs. Does it make sense to hope God will demote his other children so that Americans can feel something special?

PLO terrorizes

Re: letters to the editor in the Oct. 14 Collegian from Abdul Hakim Sherahe, senior in electrical engineering, and Kayed Khalil, senior in electrical engineering:

In the Oct. 14 Collegian, two students of the Palestinian Student Organization expressed their disgust and condemnation of the recent Israeli attack on the Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters in Tunisia, and America's recognition of this as an act of self-defense. However, in the wake of the Achille Lauro hijacking and murdering by PLO terrorists, many of us Americans are wanting our armed forces to use these "selfdefense" tactics of the Israelis to protect our innocent citizens. These students have expressed that Palestinians have the right to live just as much as we Americans do. While this is very true, they fail to mention that the PLO, the official representative of the Palestinian people, does not believe that the Israelis have the right to exist. In expressing these beliefs, the PLO has organized and conducted the murdering of innocent citizens of Israel and its allies, namely the United States. These actions, operated under the direction of Yassir Arafat, are only digging a grave for the Palestinian people. Their survival depends on the immediate change in this policy.

I wish to commend these two students for taking one of the most peaceful and effective measures of expressing their beliefs and rights. If all Palestinians act in the peaceful manner that they have, then their survival and rights are imminent. For instance, when Egypt's approach to Israel and the United States was violence, the response they received back was violence. But when they made a peaceful approach, they likewise found peace and progress at the other end. Needless to say, the same will hold true for

Negative effects beginning to show

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - After basking in the triumph of the capture of the hijackers of the Achille Lauro, the Reagan administration now must deal with the unfavorable consequences, underscored by the fall of an Italian government long supportive of American interests.

Particularly disturbing to some is that a terrorist incident could have led to the resignation of the government of Premier Bettino Craxi of Italy, an important NATO

"We all have been trying to show terrorists can't achieve anything by what they do," said Helmut Sonnenfeldt, a former senior Nixon administration official who is now a guest scholar at the Brookings Institution here. "The terrorists didn't intend to overthrow the Italian government, but it is unfortunate that a terrorist incident can have an effect of this magnitude.' Sonnenfeldt said the Craxi government "has been on the whole a very good and effective government from an American standpoint and a NATO standpoint. To lose this government is a setback.'

The consequences of the Achille Lauro hijacking, including the American seizing of an Egyptian aircraft carrying the fleeing hijackers, continue to grow. Most of the positive gains were immediately apparent. Some of the negative ones have taken longer

Not the least of the positive gains is a feeling by Americans that after years of painful losses to terrorists, the national pride has finally been upheld with the capture of the accused murderers of 69-year-old Leon

In addition, the capture of the hijackers showed an American firmness and level of technological expertise that will improve the nation's ability to deal with future terrorist attacks, experts say.

The degree of international cooperation in denying a safe port to the hijackers while they were on the ship shows that international cooperation can be effective.

The already close bonds between the United States and Israel may be strengthened even more, as Israeli leaders believe their rejection of the Palestine Liberation Organization as a terrorist group has been vindicated.

On the negative side, the fall of the Italian government becomes a major loss. In its current issue, the Economist newspaper of London said the pro-Western Craxi had given Italy one of its most stable and prosperous governments since World War II and "could be remembered as the man who changed his

Another setback is friction in relations with Egypt, which has long been the United States' chief Arab ally. It could become a major setback if Washington D.C. and Cairo were to let those frictions erode the basic relationship, or if the government of President Hosni Mubarak should — as some in Washington D.C. worry - be ousted by Moslem extremists.

Mubarak has demanded an apology from President Reagan, but Reagan has refused. The U.S.-sponsored search for a Middle East peace could be derailed, although it was nearly stalled anyway. The U.S. strategy has focused on bringing the PLO and its chairman, Yasser Arafat, into a peace negotiation of some kind with Jordan and Israel. But if evidence of PLO involvement in the hijacking proves accurate, the PLO may

Smurthwaite to celebrate facility's 25th anniversary

By BECKY WEBER Collegian Reporter

Smurthwaite, the University women's cooperative house, will celebrate its 25th anniversary Saturday and Sunday.

Early in 1960, Georgiana Smurthwaite saw a need for women's cooperative housing and took this need to University officials. The plan was approved and women wishing to live in such a facility were housed in West Stadium while the present Smurthwaite building was erected. In the spring of 1961, 62 women moved into Smurthwaite.

The living system at Smurthwaite has changed little during the past 25 years, said Deb Varner, senior in early childhood education and chairperson of the anniversary celebration.

The women living in Smurthwaite are required to do at least six hours of house duties weekly, such as cleaning, cooking and answering the phone. The girls must maintain a 2.0 GPA and serve on committees in the house. Women are selected to live in Smurthwaite through an application process.

'Smurthwaite is more like a family. It's smaller and you know all of the girls," said Janelle Hildebrand, junior in pre-nursing and president of Smurthwaite.

Smurthwaite has the capacity to house 64 women, but this semester 45 are living in the house. The number of women living in Smurthwaite changes yearly, said Kim Murray, graduate in speech pathology and house director of Smurthwaite.

Saturday the anniversary festivities will begin with half-hour reaquaintance periods for Smurthwaite alumni.

The reunion will continue Saturday night with a banquet and dance in the Union Ballroom. Hildebrand will be speaking at the banquet along with her mother, Mary Strahm Hildebrand, the first president of Smurthwaite. A dance will also be held.

Sunday, an open house tea will be from 2-5 p.m. for the Manhattan community and K-State students. A rededication ceremony will take place at the house at 3

By SHERRI HAGER Collegian Reporter

An entry-level assistance program for K-State graduating teachers will be implemented by the College of Education in the fall of 1986.

The entry-level assistance program is an effort by the College of Education to provide assistance to teachers during their first year in the profession, said Jerry Horn, associate dean and director of the K-State Center for Extended Service and Studies.

"(The first year of teaching) is one of the most critical years in terms of needing more support, additional information and additional preparation," Horn said.

The program will be divided into three forms, Horn said. The first will be to provide a series of workshops and seminars.

"Initially the workshops will be on topics such as classroom discipline and organization or management. During the course of the year we will also assess group and/or individual needs that we may have enough need to conduct seminars or workshops on first year teachers who may have

Hotline to support entry-level teachers

other areas, then we probably will," Horn said

The workshops and seminars will be geographically arranged to provide the least amount of travel time for individuals. These will be at no cost to the teachers other than time and travel. There will not be any tuition costs.

The second part of the assistance will be a toll free watts line to the College of Education.

The college will be the coordinating point for those calling in and requesting information or assistance.

There could be a variety of questions in which assistance is needed, Horn said, from questions about teacher certification to suggestions for books for a British literature class.

Developing a computer-based linking system or network among similiar jobs is the third part of the assistance program.

"For example, someone might be in Meade (teaching) and have a combination of English, speech, drama and journalism. We might find through this computer-based linkage that someone in Paola might have an almost identical job, then they could team up and do some things together," Horn said.

There are some institutions that are announcing graduate warranties or guarantees, particularly in teaching, Horn said.

"We believe that that's fairly unrealistic, simply because one cannot anticipate all the different kinds of situations a person might find themselves in.

'One individual who might be very unsuccessful in one location and in a different situation or time and place might be very successful," Horn will guarantee assistance to the people and that is really the important thing."

Several different methods about providing assistance have been piloted. The entry-level assistance program is the combination of all the pilot methods, based on both input received and some trial basis of different things.

The program is not meant to compete, interrupt or conflict with existing staff development plans in the local districts, area service agencies or the State Department of Education, Horn said.

Entry-level assistance will be available to all K-State graduates in Kansas and to all graduates, regardless of their institution, in the immediate service area. The immediate service area is the northeastern part of the state.

"The watts line, however, will be an in-state line and we will expect graduates of other institutions to call us," Horn said.

The program is voluntary and will be available to all graduates and school districts at no charge.

CiCo Park, at Wreath and Kimball avenues, will be the site of the 12th Annual Memorial Hospital Auxilliary Pumpkin Patch Festival this weekend.

From noon to 8 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, Pottorf and Casement halls in the park's northwest corner will be filled as craftsmen from Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma display and market their products.

Nancy Haines, director of volunteer services for Memorial Hospital, Sunset Avenue and Claflin Road, said this year's festival has drawn 107 exhibitors, 12 of which are appearing for the first time.

Haines said another 50 exhibitors are on a waiting list for the event.

The fair is sponsored by the Memorial Hospital Auxilliary, which rents booths to the exhibitors for the display and selling of their merchandise.

"There's all kinds of woodworking, paintings, ceramics, quilts, dolls, wheat weaving. Any kind of craft you can think of, it's there," said Dorothy Buller, publicity chairman of Pumpkin Patch 12.

"The items must be handmade or (home) baked," she said.

Alice Ham, chairman of the event, said a wild rice and chicken casserole will be served Friday evening, with steak soup, hot dogs, sandwiches and other snack foods also available during both days. The food is donated and prepared by members of the auxilliary.

Ham said proceeds from the annual event are used to raise money toward the purchase of equipment for Memorial Hospital.

Streetside Quintet captures 'doo-wop' spirit

By LISA BOOTHE Staff Writer

Do you want to doo-wop? Do you want to bop? Do you want to sock hop?

Do you want to pop? Then all you need is one group. One talented group of male, Manhattan melody makers. One Streetside Quintet. The Streetside Quintet is an a cappella, harmonizing group of singers which has performed on campus and at regional events for the past five years. And they are growing in popularity.

'It's the style," said Peter Kahler, lead singer of Streetside. "Doo-wop originated from the '50s, but it's a modern-day barbershop. It's popular with older people because they remember a lot of the tunes, but stars like Billy Joel do it and Eddie and the Cruisers, so we appeal to a younger audience, too. We cover such a wide audience array that wherever we go, whatever we sing, we can appeal to everyone in the audience.

The Streetside Quintet includes vocalists Matt Hinkin, senior in journalism and mass communications; Pete Buchanan and Keith Eyestone, seniors in business administration; Manhattan resident Peter Kahler and his brother, Mark Kahler, junior in physical education.

The men are between the ages of 21 and 23. They are all former members of Manhattan High's "Pop's Choir," a select choral group.

Streetside toured with the Pop's in high school. Then nine months after graduation, Peter Kahler reorganized the group and became their contracting manager. And contracting hasn't been too difficult because audiences keep coming to

"It's all word of mouth," Kahler said. "After the Hutchinson State Fair, I had four people coming up to me asking us to do shows. And that was after our first song. I didn't think to bring business cards, so here I was pulling out other people's cards and writing our number on the back."

Streetside is nearing its 300th performance, Kahler said. The group has performed at banquets, meetings, Greek Follies, talent shows, Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department's Arts in the Park, University Open House, Homecoming, Parents' weekend and many more events.

They also sang a jingle on the radio for Eegee's Restaurant & Ice Creamery.

Their next performance is tentatively planned for November when they hope to do a "Nooner" in the Union courtyard instead of the Catskeller where students are studying.

prefer the crowd "We interaction," Kahler said.

And Kahler is forging out a musical career for himself as well. He currently is negotiating with Arista records on a solo album. He has sung in a background chorus with Barry Manilow, and Loverboy asked him to tour with them after he sang in a jam session with them. Kahler declined.

"It's a tender thing," he said. "They were popular, but there wasn't a lot known about them and their lifestyle, so it was a hard decision."

In terms of crowd interaction, Streetside received their greatest applause at Greek Follies last year.

'Greek Follies was packed," bass singer Hinkin said. "I don't know if it was our best performance, but it definitely was the most exciting. The crowd went crazy when we were done and it was a neat feeling."

Hinkin will graduate in December, as will first tenor Buchanan. Both vocalists plan to pursue other vocations, although they would still like to sing on the side.

'Singing a cappella is very hard," Buchanan said. "When you have instruments, you have notes to help you, but with a cappella, you only have the guy standing next to you to help you out."

The Streetside Quintet rarely learn their music from notes anyway. They listen to songs - often commercial jingles - and learn their parts by ear.

superior in sound to the basic quartet harmony, said Eyestone, baritone and monotone.

The result is a quintet harmony

"If you get four-part harmony, you can get a lead," Eyestone said. "Whereas in a quartet, you can't."

Eyestone is the newest member of Streetside and was drawn to the group because of their '50s and '60s repertoire.

Also drawn to the lyrics of the songs is second tenor Mark Kahler who started singing with his brother at a beach party at Manhattan

Junior High. "I like music with the best overall vocal sound, not the instruments.' Mark said. "I think the movie that started it off was 'Dead Man's Curve' about 1978. We started singing those old songs for the heck of it. Then Peter and I thought we should sing at the beach party, and I think that inspired him to get the Streetside going.'

Peter Kahler said he believes it is the nostalgia of their music's era that keeps the Quintet in demand. The trends of the '50s have reappeared in music, in art and in

"I read in Life magazine that people are reliving the '50s because those were the times when life was so much simpler, not like our 'New Coke, Classic Coke, Coke with caffeine, Diet Coke with no caffeine, Coke with cherry' times. Back then, there was only one to choose from. The real thing.

Staff/Brad Fanshi

Comedian delivers message by sharing life's experiences

By KRISTI YEARGIN Collegian Reporter

Mike Warnke has become widely known as the Christian Comedian using comedy routines while preaching gospel messages.

During his concert Thursday night, Warnke joked about everyday family incidents and church-related occurrences, which he connected with the salvation message of Jesus Christ.

Warnke uses comedy in his concerts to help the audience understand the Bible. His rendition of passages from the Bible are done in a storytelling fashion to appeal to the audience, using the language of the youth today.

With a background as a hippie, drug addict/pusher, Vietnam Marine Corps medic and satanist high priest, Warnke shows the audience, through his experiences, what is being said in the Bible. The "characters" created

The main message of Warnke's concert was to spread love, and he invited the audience to join him in singing "Jesus Loves Me.

"(God) taught me that love isn't anything unless you give it to so-meone else," Warnke said. "The most you can give to anyone else is yourself."

Warnke works to spread the love of Jesus, not only through his concerts, but also through outreach programs in prisons and mental hospitals. The program will feature Warnke at the end of October in a episode exploring what Halloween means to satanists. # Films lack excitement, character development

By GARY JOHNSON Collegian Reviewer

It's time for the fall crop of movies. The more commercial of the fall releases, the sure bets, are the ones currently playing in town.

Film Review

First, there's "Commando" - The Arnold Schwarzenegger Show. That's clear from the opening minutes when Arnold strolls down a mountainside, a tree trunk over one shoulder, his muscles rippling in the morning light. The attention is on him in a way that it wasn't in "The Terminator." That earlier movie wasn't a showcase for his body. It was director James Cameron's baby all the way. Even when Arnold wasn't around for the movie's tense conclusion, nothing much was lost.

Even though "Commando" is nowhere nearly as good as "The Terminator," it's still a lot of fun. Arnold plays John Matrix, the exleader of a U.S. Army secret tactical unit. He gets forced back into action when his daughter is kidnapped.

"Commando" is sort of like "Rambo" minus the right wing politics. It's played as comic-book material and that tone is maintained throughout. The only thing disappointing about the movie is the attitude the filmmakers take toward violence. At one point Matrix's daughter has just watched her father kill off a slew of men. She then jumps up, rosy-cheeked and smiling, ready to give her loving daddy a big hug. So much for trauma, huh?

Also in town is Stephen King's "Silver Bullet." His books lose something in translation to the big screen. Everything becomes too literal and as a result all the fun disappears. This movie is creaky from beginning to end. King's idea of adding something new to werewolf movies is to make the hero a boy confined to a wheelchair. But the rest of the movie is routine stuff that's been seen before, and seen done better. "The Howling," for instance, had a wonderful tongue-in-cheek approach, while at the same time creating some true bloodcurdling suspense. "Silver Bullet" just crawls to its predictable conclusion.

And then there's "Jagged Edge." This one might be the most disappointing of the bunch. It wants to look sophisticated and chic, but this is really cheap paperback novel material. It's one of those mysteries where if someone ripped out the last chapter of the book, you'd be mystified over who the real culprit was. Actually solving the case isn't all that difficult once the audience pays attention to what the movie lets them know about the main characters, played by Jeff Bridges and Glenn Close. The filmmakers deliberately withhold information, the old dime-store-novel ploy, to make their plot work. Bridges' character remains sketchy. That's so they can do anything they want with him at the movie's conclusion. And Close's past problems are left murky so that it's impossible to make heads or tails of her relationship with Bridges. This movie is all manipulation.

Close plays a lawyer called in to defend Bridges when his wife is brutally murdered. The district attorney is bent on putting the blame on Bridges, and while the case unfolds Close and Bridges fall in love. Or is it really love? Is Bridges actually just using her? The plot is similar to "Body Heat." That's the real genre for this material - James Cain mystery and lust. But the filmmakers pretend this is classy stuff. It's about the rich people, fancy cars, thoroughbred horses, and country clubs. That's been as overdone as the teen-age sex comedies.

K-State to find answers against Kansas

Several questions will face K-State's football team Saturday in Lawrence when the Wildcats take on the University of Kansas Jayhawks.

The following questions have been pondered and discussed. No one knows the answers. The only thing for sure is that they will be answered at 1:30 p.m. Saturday at Memorial Stadium in Lawrence as the 0-5 Wildcats take the field against the 4-2 Jayhawks.

Is K-State's football team catching KU at a good time?

Up until last Saturday, Kansas had been sailing along with a 4-1 record while averaging 35 points a game. The only loss - a 24-20 loss on the road to Florida State was a heartbreaker for KU and Coach Mike Gottfried, but it was a loss the 'Hawks can live with.

Last Saturday's 22-21 upset at the hands of Iowa State University in Ames, Iowa, was not as easy to swallow for KU. The Jayhawks' potent passing attack was shot down by the Cyclones' defense that included man-to-man coverage on KU's receiving corps.

It seems that the man-to-man coverage is the key to stopping KU on offense. But K-State won't implement that type of coverage, according to Wildcat Coach Lee Moon, who said K-State doesn't have the personnel to keep up with the likes of KU receivers Richard Estell, Willie Vaughn, Johnny Holloway, Tom Quick and Sandy Don't count on Kansas looking past the Wildcats to their next game Oct. 26 against 12th-ranked Oklahoma State University. KU learned its lesson in Ames.

So the answer is no. K-State is not

TODD NIGHSWONGER Sports Editor

can only hope that the 'Hawks make another sub-par showing.

Will the extra week off for K-State pay dividends come Saturday?

Seldom does K-State's football schedule call for an off day in the middle of the season. But this year, the 'Cats started a week earlier than most college teams.

Moon has said the last two weeks that the time off would give the players a chance "to get their legs back under them." The team didn't practice Thursday, Friday or Saturday last week, giving the players a chance to go home for the weekend or just relax and get away from football.

The break couldn't have come at a better time for the players. Defensive end Jeffery Hurd said the time off "was a mental boost. We should be ready to come back just like we were in August - except we should come out with a win instead of so many losses.

The week off also gives a team the advantage of additional preparation for the upcoming opponent - a luxury KU doesn't have. Yes, the week off should help K-State, but it may not help enough.

Will a change of atmosphere provide the 'Cats a much-needed lift after losing the first five games - all at home?

It has to be a bummer for the players to 1) lose a head coach, 2) lose five home games and 3) lose the fans.

Of course, the first two losses of the season led to No. 1. That ultimately led to three more losses for No. 2. Both had a hand in bringing on No. 3.

After a crowd of 30,300 witnessed K-State's first loss — 16-10 to Wichita State University - the attendance declined sharply. The low mark was the game against Texas Christian University that drew just 15,500.

K-State needs a change of atmosphere. With a large crowd on hand Saturday in Lawrence and state bragging rights on the line, the 'Cats won't have any problems getting up for this one. Another home game defeat in front of a small crowd would have been enough to crush any pride the players had left in them.

Can K-State beat Kansas? Odds favor the Jayhawks. K-State hasn't beaten KU in Lawrence since 1969. The two team's 1985 records speak for themselves. The Wildcat defense gave up 177 yards passing two weeks ago against the runoriented University of Oklahoma Sooners. Kansas, on the other hand, is averaging 318 yards a game in the air.

If K-State can't stop the Sooners' passing game, how can the 'Cats contain KU quarterback Mike Norseth and Co.?

While the Jayhawk defense has not been overpowering, it should be enough to stop a Wildcat offense that has shown no signs of coming out of hibernation.

K-State's odds of defeating KU Saturday are not good. But who would have thought Iowa State would beat the Jayhawks?

Bragging rights on line as 'Cats battle 'Hawks

By DAVID SVOBODA Assistant Sports Editor

K-State will be looking to snap a five-game losing streak and the University of Kansas will be looking to get back on the winning track Saturday as the two teams square off in the 83rd renewal of their intra-state rivalry at Memorial Stadium in Lawrence.

Kansas enters the game with a record of 4-2 overall and 0-1 in the Big Eight Conference, while K-State is 0-5 overall and 0-1 in conference play. KU is coming off a tough 22-21 loss to Iowa State last Saturday in Ames, while K-State was idle a week ago.

The KU offense, which ranks ninth in the nation in total yardage, is built around the talents of quarterback Mike Norseth, who currently ranks third in the nation in individual total offense.

Norseth has thrown for 1,869 yards and 12 touchdowns in six games for KU and his efforts haven't gone unnoticed.

"We're going to have to put pressure on Norseth. He's the guy that worries me the most," K-State Interim Head Coach Lee Moon said. "I think he's a great quarterback, and if we give him time to throw he's going to pick us apart."

K-State defensive end Jeffrey Hurd agreed with his coach's assessment of the KU quarterback.

"We're really going to have to attack them from the outside," Hurd said. "He doesn't roll out that much from what I've seen, but he'll scramble when he needs to. And when he's scrambling, he has his head up all the time looking downfield. That's how he completes most of his passes."

A quarterback couldn't be successful, however, without good receivers and as K-State defensive back Jack Epps will tell you, KU has a bundle of them.

"They've got a lot of good receivers that will really test our secondary," Epps said. "It will be a good challenge for us."

The challenge includes stopping Jayhawk receivers Richard Estell, Willie Vaughn and Sandy McGee - three of the top five receivers in the conference in catches made per game.

Estell currently ranks 17th in the nation in catches per game, but Vaughn is the team leader in touchdown catches with four.

How good is the KU receiving corps? Just ask receiver Skip Peete, who was injured in the Jayhawks' first game and has missed more games this season than he has played.

"It's only natural to wish you could be in the lineup," Peete said. "But the guys in there are doing a really great job. If I get back, I don't even know where I could play.'

The Kansas offense currently ranks ninth in the nation in yards gained per game, while the K-State offense ranks 105th. Not to fret, Wildcat fans. K-State's defense ranks 29 places better than KU's in yards allowed per contest. K-State's defense ranks 46th while KU's ranks 75th.

KU's defense does, however, have its share of standouts, most notably senior linebacker Willie Pless. Pless has 529 career tackles, just 14 short of the Big Eight record of 543 set by former K-State linebacker Gary Spani.

But records and rankings can be thrown out the window when these two teams collide.

"Whenever these two teams collide, the emotion is going to be there," Hurd said. "The game is for the bragging rights of the

'Cats to play Cyclones in volleyball matchup

By CLAUDIA SANGSTER Collegian Reporter

After a tough loss to the Univerity of Nebraska Cornhuskers Tuesday night, K-State's volleyball team will try to bounce back and improve on its conference record as the 'Cats play Iowa State University at 7:30 p.m. tonight in Ahearn Field House.

After facing the Cyclones on Friday, the Wildcats will host the Wichita State Shockers in a nonconference match, Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in Ahearn.

Tonight's opponent, the Cyclones, comes into the contest with a 10-6 overall record and are 0-2 in conference action. The Wildcats are currently 10-7 overall and 1-3 in the conference.

"Iowa State is a good defensive team. They are one of the top serving teams in the conference," Wildcat Head Coach Scott Nelson said. "Being one of the top serving teams is probably why they are a good defensive team.

Nelson said that both the Cyclones and the Wildcats have a lot of things in common, especially in the Big Eight race.

"They are very similar to our team," Nelson said. "There is an importance in this match to both teams. There are four teams that are trying to position themselves among the top three in the conference."

The key to defeating the Cyclones will be a combination of things, Miller said.

"We will need to play a good match to beat them. We will have to have good execution and good intensity,"

Despite the tough losses in the conference season to this point, Nelson has been very pleased with what he has seen - not only in match play, but during practice as well.

"Our attitudes in practice have been real focused on our game plan and they have been real positive, Nelson said. "There has been competition among the players and they have been pushing each other. That is a good sign."

Going into tonight's match with Iowa State, K-State still has individuals among the top performers in the conference.

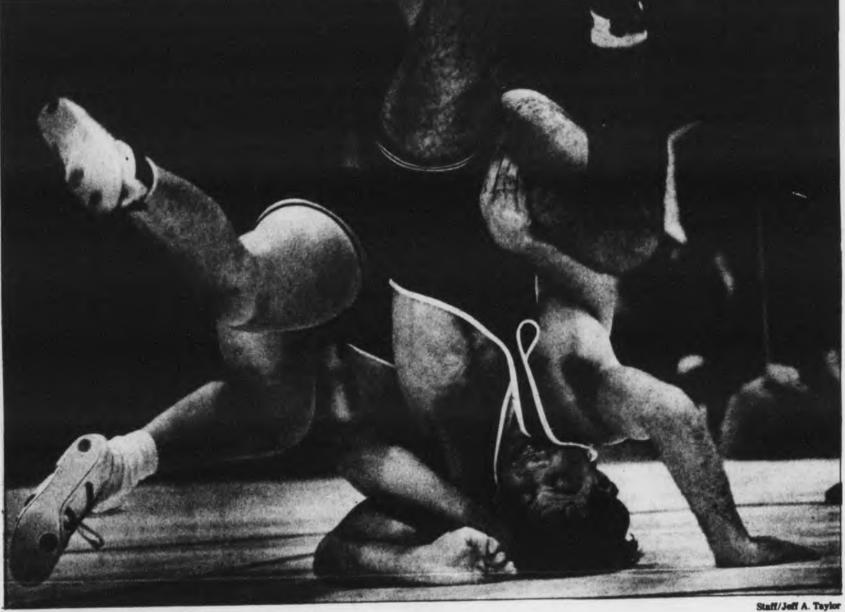

Renee Whitney currently is third in the Big Eight in hitting percentage at 33 percent. Donna Lee is also among the leaders at 30 percent. Lee is in tie for first in kills per game with four. Mary Kinsey is third in the conference in serving aces per game with 4.9. Helen Bundy still is leading the conference in blocking at 1.85 a game. Whitney is second in assists with 9.9 a game. Lee also holds a place in the dig category. She is averaging 3.67 a game. The Wildcats as a team are among the top three in four catagories. They are second in hitting efficiency, aces and blocking and third in kills per

TKE stops Sigma Nu for flag football title

By JAY KNORR Collegian Reporter

Tau Kappa Epsilon captured the fraternity division championship in flag football Thursday by defeating Sigma Nu 25-6 at the L.P. Washburn Recreation Area intramural fields.

The Sigma Nu's opened up the scoring with a trick play. The ball was hiked to a lineman who ran it 15 yards for the touchdown. The extra point attempt failed. The TKE's answered with a 10-yard rollout pass to tie the score at six. The extra point attempt was un-

In the fourth quarter, the TKE's piled up more points. Brent Lilly ran around the left end for five yards and the touchdown, which was set up by a 40-yard diving pass reception by Kevin Eickman. The extra point pass was tipped by a Sigma Nu defender but was caught by a TKE receiver for the convertion.

On the last play of the game, Steve Brown put the icing on the cake for the TKE's when he returned an interception for a touchdown to make the final score 25-6. Brent Lilly expressed his hap-

Although Nelson has top performers among the conference leaders in statistics, he feels that the team as a whole has been a key to the success of the Wildcats.

"We are making good improvments on things as a team," Nelson said. "They (the players) are understanding team concepts. We are making adjustments better and quicker than any team I've had since I've been here. We are doing a better job of minimizing our weaknesses and maximizing our strengths."

Saturday's match against Wichita State will be the third confrontation between the two teams this season. K-State has come out on top in the previous two meetings, but Nelson and the players are not overlooking the intra-state rival.

Harriers to face tough competition

By TONY CARBAJO Collegian Reporter

K-State's men's and women's cross country teams get a chance to prove whether their national rankings are for real Saturday when they compete in the Wisconsin Burger King Invitational, a tournament that will feature 20 of the top-ranked teams in the nation.

Both K-State teams are ranked 15th in the latest NCAA poll and Head Coach Steve Miller expects the competition to be better at Wisconsin than at the NCAA Championships later this year.

"Some ranked teams may not even go to the national meet because of the district set-up. So this meet will be as good, if not better, than the national meet," Miller said.

To be invited to the Wisconsin Invitational a team must have been ranked in the top 20 this year or have scored points in the NCAA meet last

Miller said he believes now is the time for his teams to rise to the challenge

"I think this weekend we can make a quantum leap forward," he said. "It's a very pivotal time for us. It's time to stop making excuses, put the injuries to rest and find out how good we really are."

In the men's division, top-ranked Arizona, No. 3 Wisconsin, No. 5 Iowa State, No. 6 West Virginia, No. 8 Texas, No. 10 UCLA, No. 16 Stanford, No. 17 Northwestern, Brigham Young, Michigan, Oregon and Tennessee will be competing for the top

In the women's race, Wisconsin, Stanford, Brigham Young and Oregon - the four teams are ranked second through fifth, respectively, and No. 7 Texas, No. 9 Villanova, No. 11 Iowa State, No. 13 Northwestern, California-Berkeley, Florida and Missouri will be competing.

"This is one of those meets where you can finish 10th and still be one of the top teams in the country," Miller said. "I hope it can be a very positive experience for us. I am very optimistic. We are healthy and well rested."

The performance of the men's team Saturday is of special concern to Miller, who said the harriers have not run up to his expectations this

"I think the men have been unfulfilled. The women have come closer to performing to their potential, while the men have not run the way they are capable," Miller said.

The men's team will take six runners to the Wisconsin meet, while the women's team will have.

If you think you see a UFO on the K-State campus this weekend, don't be alarmed. It's probably just a flying disc* soaring through the air from the hands of a competitor in the Kansas Flying Disc Championships.

The first event of the tournament, golf, is scheduled to begin this Saturday at 8:30 a.m. at the band field on the east side of campus. The second round of golf starts at 5 p.m.

The most popular flying disc event is probably "ultimate." The first round of this competition is scheduled for 10:30 a.m. at the deadlock, the president could dissolve Parliament and call elections before the next scheduled date in 1988

Craxi said in his speech that the United States had asked him to get in touch with Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, at the start of negotiations for release of the Achille Lauro and those abord.

The premier said he had lodged a protest with the United States government, charging that Italian air space had been violated. He claimed two American warplanes followed the Egyptian airliner, without authorization, when it flew from Sicily to Ciampino military airport in Rome last Friday night with Abbas aboard.

Defense Minister Spadolini, whose resignation caused the coalition to collapse, told reporters later that Craxi's account of the alleged violation by U.S. planes was accurate "in every detail."

Craxi said: "The Italian government has decided to open an investigation and a protest was immediately filed with the Washington government."

"The polemical tone of the first reactions of the American government could not but provoke the strongest and displeased surprise as well as a feeling of bitterness for the ignorance on the part of a friendly government of everything that the Italian government had done." the prime minister said in his 40-minute address.

"I came to Kansas City because I love the Royals," said Graff, who missed an anatomy lab Thursday to see the Royals' return. "I'm just glad to be in Kansas City.'

Graff, who became a Royals fan about three years ago, didn't attend any of the league playoff games but has vowed to get tickets for the Series.

"I'm going to get tickets if I have to cash my plane ticket home," the New York native said. There are a few hundred tickets available for the games in Kansas City and are selling for $30 each - $20 for standing room

A few fans chose to avoid the crowd at KCI and stopped alongside Interstate 29 just south of KCI to display signs and shout to passing cars, many of which in turn honked

The small group, however, thought they were in trouble when a police car approached.

"The cops turned their sirens on and blinked their lights. I thought they might want us to move," said

Pam Cone of Gladstone, Mo. "But they were waving, too.'

Cone's counterpart, Judy Elliott, said she and her friends would stay and hold up their signs and yell 'until we don't see anymore cars."

Eleanor Littell of Raytown, Mo., and Loretta Elliott of Lee's Summitt, Mo., had attended the last two games in Toronto. Their plane arrived at KCI after the Royals did and they rushed over - along with their pilot to where the Royals were supposed to be. But they were too

"He (pilot) jumped on the shuttle with us and came running over here and he's from Atlanta. He doesn't know the Kansas City Royals from anybody," Elliott said

Reagan letter boosts chance for Craxi's return to office

By The Associated Press

ROME - President Reagan's "Dear Bettino" letter was credited Sunday with making it more likely Bettino Craxi would be asked to form a government to replace his own, which was toppled by the Achille Lauro hijacking.

President Francisco Cossiga said he would reflect Sunday on consultations he had with political leaders one day earlier before naming a premier-designate with the task of lining up a new government, Italy's 45th since World War II. Cossiga was expected to announce his choice on today.

U.S. Deputy Secretary of State John C. Whitehead flew to Rome on Saturday to try to smooth relations between the United States and Italy, frayed by developments which followed the hijacking. During a meeting he gave Reagan's letter to Craxi, who has been considered a valuable U.S. al-

Craxi told Parliament in a speech just before resigning on Thursday that a showdown had developed between Italian and U.S. troops after U.S. warplanes forced an Egyptian airliner carrying the hijackers to land in Sicily.

He also said that he protested to government officials in Washington, D.C., what he said was a violation of Italian airspace when U.S. aircraft allegedly followed the Egyptian plane from Sicily to Rome.

According to Craxi's office, Reagan wrote that despite "differences on the best way to respond to the hijacking," the Italian and U.S. governments "share the fundamental commitment on the necessity to respond with firmness to the challenges posed by international terrorism."

Reagan also wrote Craxi that: "I profoundly value the advice you have provided

'Reagan's more than cordial letter arrived" to help clear the way for the choice of premier-designate, wrote La Repubblica, Rome's left-leaning newspaper

Craxi said Saturday after getting Reagan's letter that he would be "pleased" to attend a meeting of Western leaders in New York next Thursday called by the president to discuss his November meeting with Soviet

Regents declare committee of 15 appropriate for president search

By TIM CARPENTER Editor

PITTSBURG - After 15 minutes of discussion the Board of Regents elected Friday not to appoint more people to the Presidential Search Committee and address the imbalance of faculty, student and alumni on the committee.

The regents' unanimous decision to leave the 15-member committee as it stands - composed of three students, three faculty, six alumni, one dean and a two ex-officio members - is not intended to send negative signals to the University community, said regents' Chairman Lawerence Jones.

Jones, also chairman of the Coleman Co. of Wichita, said the "only motivation for adding additional alumni was to get the best possible committee - a group that could get the job done.'

Initially, the committee was to comprise 12 people - three alumni, three students, three faculty, one dean and two ex-officio members. But that changed Sept. 20, the day committee members' names were made public. The list of committee members included six alumni, but left student and faculty membership at three

In response to the regents' announcement, Faculty Senate unanimously approved a motion during an Oct. 1 special meeting expressing their "grave concern about the unequal composition" of the committee. Student Senate passed a similar resolution Sept. 26, stating in part that students are "appalled and dismayed" by the regents' action.

Charles Reagan, professor of philosophy and president of Faculty Senate, commended the board Friday for naming quality people to the committee, but asked the board to review the imbalance and "consider a redress of the committee."

The decision to add three additional alumni sent a message to the faculty - a message, according to Reagan, that was not received well.

"Do you want to know why the faculty are unhappy?" Reagan asked. "I'll tell you. The decision to add more alumni tells the faculty one of two things. One, that the regents don't trust the faculty. Or two, the faculty don't count in the life of the University as much as the alumni.

Reagan suggested, as did Student Body President Steve Brown, junior in preveterinary medicine, that the board add three students and three faculty to the Calling the K-State presidential search one of the most important searches the board has ever conducted, Jones said it was not the intention of the board to suggest faculty or student views are any less important than those of the alumni.

Regent Richard Reinhardt, an Erie dairy farmer, echoed that belief during the brief discussion saying he "felt bad that constituents at the University took exception to our intent. However, I know in my

Legislature discusses Washburn

By TIM CARPENTER Editor

PITTSBURG - Board of Regents Chairman Lawrence Jones said Friday "there never will be a good time - and its hard to imagine a worse time" to admit Washburn University to the regents' system.

Jones addressed members of the Special Committee on Washburn University, a panel of legislative leaders studying the possibility of adding Washburn to the state education system, in Topeka before returning to the regents meeting in Pittsburg.

Upon arrival in Pittsburg, Jones briefed the regents on the session. He said the advantage of adding Washburn is that the regents system could "expand our influence a bit and grab the attention" of Topeka residents and the Kansas Legislature.

At the Friday meeting Jones stressed the disadvantages, however, saying money is the major road block to linking Washburn to the six state universities and the Kansas Technical Institute in Salina.

"Putting a school in the state system when we are not doing the things we know we should" at the seven regents' institutions is not a pleasant thought, he said.

During a special meeting Sept. 5, the nine-member board voted against bringing the 7,000-student school into the state system. This is the third time in the past 10 years members of the Kansas Legislature have attempted to make Washburn, presently supported by state funds and Topeka property taxes, into the state school system.

The previous two proposals were shot down because it was decided it would be too expensive to carry out the plan.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents, said the biggest question to be answered is, "How much is it going to cost?"

"Pick a number," he said, "and it will be accurate - depending on what you want to do. The question is basically unanswerable."

Tax dollars support the regents institutions and Jones estimates adding the school to the system would cost taxpayers $8-10 million. He said budget limitations make the prospect of adding Washburn in the near future unattractive.

Washburn officials told the legislative committee Friday the school's entry into the system is inevitable and the school would consider negotiating a funding plan that would ease the financial burden on the regents system if necessary.

The committee is expected to make a decision concerning the admission of Washburn to the system sometime in November.

Band pays tribute to Beatles

'1964' musicians renew era

By A. SCHARNHORST Managing Editor

Putting together a successful rock 'n' roll tribute perfomance can require much more work than simply mimicking members of a defunct band and learning recognizable guitar breaks.

To the members of the Beatlestribute-band 1964 - which performed Sunday night in Union Forum Hall — paying tribute to the Fab Four and re-creating their stage show demands more than donning Beatle boots and getting bowl haircuts. The band performs with vintage instruments, amplifiers and period lighting.

1964 seeks to create the aura of a 1964 Beatles concert - concurrent with the audience's preconceptions. Rather than performing exactly as the Beatles generally did - in short sets of medlies - the band attempts to summon memories of the Beatles' music as it has been preserved on record and film.

"There were no fancy light shows on television at the time," said Mark Benson (John Lennon) in an interview following the performance. For that reason, the band performs with "just plain white lights."

The concert, which was sponsored by the Union Program Council Special Events Committee, consisted of renditions of over 30 popular and lesser-known Beatles

In order to re-create the Beatles stage sound, members of 1964 perform with period Vox amplifiers. Not only do the amplifiers work to remind the audience of the look of a typical Beatles stage, Benson said, but "the Vox sound" is integral in remembering the aural effect of the Beatles.

Because only two of the band members somewhat resemble their characters - Greg George (Ringo Starr) and Gary Grimes (Paul McCartney) - and the other two bear no resemblance whatsoever, 1964 proves that a physical likeness isn't necessary to evoke the flavor of an era.

College's renaming focuses attention on research goals

By VICKI REYNOLDS Government Editor

Students in the home economics curriculum will have a new college title on their diplomas due to a name change approved by the Board of Regents at its meeting Friday. The new name is the College of Human Ecology.

Barbara Stowe, dean of the College of Human Ecology, said the name change better reflects the sophistication of the research and study of programs in the college.

There is a misunderstanding about the home economics name. Here at K-State, this (the research) just is not understood by employers," Stowe said. "Three years ago students asked that the statement on their diplomas indicate their major. They thought this was more descriptive of their specialization."

Stowe said the name change is the culmination of three years of discussion by several committees of students, faculty and alumni.

Stowe said the decision to change the college's name reflects a national trend and works toward continuity on the national level.

Surveys were distributed among students and faculty, Stowe said, including one by the Kansas Home Economics Association. The majority of those surveyed said the name should be changed. A student/faculty committee reviewed similar programs across the United States and decided a change was in order. "The problem was that we couldn't decide what to change the name to,"

The name "College of Human Ecology" was chosen, Stowe said, because it was the second most common name across the United States used to describe similar programs and avoid the stereotyping of students within those programs.

The decision to change the name was not taken lightly, Stowe said.

"A lot of audiences have ownership of the college " she said "and a m jor thing like a name change needs to be reviewed by the groups involved - like students and alumni. I felt it was important to talk to these

Kelly Murray, senior in dietetics and institutional management, said she thinks the name change will have positive effects on both recruitment and getting research grants for the

"If you have a different name from the stereotyped high school home economics (idea), it might cause researchers to take a better look at what we're doing in our program," Murray said. "Also, we may have a better chance at recruiting people into the college, because they don't want to be in that type of stereotyped program otherwise.

Stowe said the entire faculty voted on the proposal in March and sent it to the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee, which approved the proposal and presented it to the full senate for review. The senate approved the change and sent it to the regents, where it was reviewed by the chief academic officers and the Council of Presidents before being approved unanimously Friday by the regents.

Accident causes death of K-State sophomore

By POLLY A. COLIP Staff Writer

A 19-year-old K-State student was killed in a one-car accident on Tuttle Creek Boulevard Sunday night.

Roger Y. Elkins, sophomore in environmental design who lived at 1632 McCain Lane, was pronounced dead at 8:20 p.m. at The St. Mary Hospital, a hospital spokesperson

According to Traffic Sgt. Larry Freeby of the Riley County Police Department, Elkins was northbound on Tuttle Creek Boulevard near Marlatt Avenue at 7:35 p.m., when he lost control of his Datsun 280ZX on the east side of the road. The vehicle then struck a tree and Elkins was thrown from the vehicle, Freeby

There were no passengers with Elkins and no other vehicles were involved, he said.

"The vehicle left the roadway at an apparently high rate of speed, impacted with a tree and the automobile was then cut in half," he said. "There were no skid marks no indication of breaking at all."

Freeby said he didn't know how fast the vehicle was travelling.

The spokesperson at St. Mary said cardiopulmonary resuscitation was performed on Elkins upon his arrival at the hospital.

Elkins, a native of Overland Park and 1984 graduate of Shawnee Mission South High School, was a member of Alpha Tau Omega frater-

Israeli students mad at tuition rise

JERUSALEM - A nationwide student boycott to protest increased tuition fees closed Israeli universities Sunday, and police broke up a student demonstration in Jerusalem.

Police spokesman Rafi Levy said one student was detained during a tussle when police dispersed 40 people who were blocking an in-tersection near Hebrew University's Mount Scopus campus.

Israel Radio said dozens of students from Tel Aviv University also blocked an intersection near their campus.

The boycott delayed the opening of Israel's five universities after the summer recess. The students were objecting to a $300 increase over last year's tuition fee of $900.

Prime Minister Shimon Peres' Cabinet ordered the increase as part of a program adopted in July to trim government spending and reduce Israel's triple-digit inflation.

Soviet official walks out on talks

PEKING - Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Leonid Ilyichev left for home Sunday after a seventh round of normalization talks with China failed to make progress on the major obstacles between the communist neighbors.

The official Xinhua news agency said the talks were useful and businesslike, but Chinese negotiator Qian Qichen told reporters at Peking airport he was "dissatisfied" because the major problems were unresolved.

Ilyichev said the two sides again discussed the three obstacles: Soviet border troops, Cambodia and Afghanistan.

An official communique said Ilyichev and Vice Foreign Minister Qian talked about political normalization and "certain international issues" during Oct. 4-18, Xinhua reported.

The communique said the two sides agreed the dialogue was "useful" and will hold an eighth round of talks in Moscow in April

The semiannual normalization meetings began in October 1982.

Actors appear for mudslide victims

NEWARK, N.J. - Actors Robert DeNiro and Raul Julia were among celebrities appearing on a telethon on a Spanish-language television station that raised more than $1 million for victims of a devastating mudslide in Puerto Rico.

The program on WNJU-TV was among efforts in a drive by New York metropolitan area Hispanic leaders to help raise the $13 million Puerto Rican authorities say they need to feed, clothe and shelter survivors of the Oct. 7 slide that leveled the Mameyes shantytown in Carlos Barba, the station's president and general manager, said $1,032,775 was pledged by midnight.

Authorities have said the mudslide killed between 300 and 500 people and left 5,000 others homeless.

Evangelist cites miracle in accident

LOS ANGELES - Rocker-turned-evangelist Little Richard says a miracle saved his life when his rented car crashed into a telephone pole two weeks ago in West Hollywood.

ne said that what happened to him has been a miracle and that the Lord was working with the doctors to heal him, and that he survived the crash because the Lord was watching over him," Ron Wise of Cedars-Sinai Medical Center said Sunday.

The 52-year-old singer, whose full name is Richard Wayne Penniman, may be released sometime this week, Wise said. He is an ordained minister in the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

The creator of "Tutti Frutti" and "Good Golly Miss Molly" suffered a broken leg, scalp cut and bruised ribs in the Oct. 8 accident. Wise said Richard has gotten telephone calls from former Beatle Paul McCartney, rockers Michael Jackson and Stevie Wonder, 1950s singer Pat Boone and television and radio music host Dick Clark.

Musicians miss runway in Indiana

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. - A plane carrying singer Ray Charles and his musicians and crew members slid into a cornfield while landing in heavy rain, but only the pilot was hospitalized.

Charles, 55, said he left Bloomington Hospital after being examined because "it's only one hospital here and I didn't feel that they should have the doctor wasting his precious time with me when there were people who really needed his attention."

The four-engine, propeller-driven Viscount was carrying 28 people when it slid off the runway and down a hill Saturday, said state Trooper Omar Davis.

The pilot was admitted in satisfactory condition with a back injury, said hospital spokeswoman Sandy Fiscus. Charles' scheduled Saturday night performance at Indiana Univer-

Federal authorities seeking charges

NEW LONDON, Conn. - Federal prosecutors have been authorized to seek an indictment against a former Navy official for allegedly lying to the Navy about when he began job negotiations with General Dynamics Corp., according to a published report.

The Day of New London, quoting Justice Department sources, reported Sunday that a review panel of the Justice Department's criminal fraud section earlier this month gave prosecutors permission to ask a grand jury in Arlington, Va., to indict former Assistant Secretary of the Navy George A. Sawyer.

Sawyer, 55, joined General Dynamics as a vice president in June 1983. Before that, he served two years as assistant Navy secretary for shipbuilding and logistics.

One of four assistant Navy secretaries, Sawyer was responsible for the awarding of submarine construction contracts, The Day said. The Navy has said there are no indications Sawyer favored Electric Boat, the General Dynamics shipyard in Groton, the newspaper said.

In a statement disclosed during a congressional hearing in March, Sawyer said he did not negotiate with "any defense industry representative regarding...future employment" before May 20, 1983,

According to congressional testimony by General Dynamics Chairman David S. Lewis, that was two months after Sawyer had accepted from General Dynamics a round-trip ticket from Washington to St. Louis for interviews with four high-level executives, The Day said.

Sawyer's wife Carol said Saturday by telephone from their St. Louis home that he was home but would have no comment on any possible indictment, The Day said. She referred questions to Terry O'Donnell, a General Dynamics lawyer in Washington, it said.

The Day quoted O'Donnell as saying: "The matter is under review with the Department of Justice. It would be inappropriate to make any statement on the determination of the case, but Mr. Sawyer maintains now, as he has always maintained, that he conducted himself properly and fully in accordance with the law."

Police look for man in bridal garb

NEW YORK - A search by the police harbor unit and the Coast Guard on Sunday failed to find a man dressed in a wedding gown who was believed to have fallen overboard during a costume party

Sgt. Peter Sweeney, a police spokesman, said the man, who was apparently drunk, fell overboard shortly after midnight during the cruise on a Circle Line boat.

Searchers looking in the Hudson River in the area of pier 94 near West 54th Street off Manhattan's West Side failed to find the man, identified as a 28-year-old resident of Leonia, N.J.

Nebraska company gets free rooms

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - A Nebraska firm was given 71 free hotel rooms in Topeka after a Kansas City hotel canceled their reservations in order to make way for guests affiliated with the Major League Baseball Association, in town for the World Series.

Truesdell Distributing Co. also was given a deposit refund and an undisclosed amount of cash after it was bumped from the Adam's Mark Hotel, which is within walking distance of Royals Stadium. Topeka is 70 miles west of Kansas City.

The firm, which brought dealers to Missouri for the Missouri-Nebraska football game Saturday in Columbia and the Kansas City Chiefs game Sunday, took the hotel's owner, HBE Corp., to court Fri-

A lawyer for the firm, Mark Thornhill, said the firm had placed a 50 percent deposit on the rooms in September. But company officials were notified Thursday that the rooms would not be available because of the hotel's contract with the baseball association.

Thornhill got a temporary restraining order from Jackson County Circuit Court Judge Louis Lombardo late Friday, ordering the hotel owners to honor their contract with the Nebraska firm.

In a conference with the judge Saturday morning, company of-ficials agreed to take the Topeka rooms "and some cash." He declined to divulge the amount of the settlement.

Other baseball fans who had traveled to the city to witness the first two games of the World Series between the Royals and the St. Louis Cardinals also reported arriving at hotel rooms around the city and finding their reservations gone.

Authorities report traffic fatalities

Two people were struck and killed this weekend as they walked along highways, including an Augusta man who died after being hit by a vehicle Sunday along U.S. 54 in southeast part of the state.

The Butler County Sheriff's office said Bryan Dickenson, 23, of Augusta, was struck by the vehicle shortly before 1 a.m. Sunday, about one mile east of Andover.

Kathleen L. Weishuhn, 28, of LaGrange, Texas, died after being hit as she tried to cross Interstate 70 just east of WaKeeney, the Kansas Highway Patrol said. The accident occurred about 11 p.m. Friday.

Marketing firms emphasizing average Kansas City citizens

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Marketers from across the country recognize that Joe and Josephine Average live in the Kansas City area and count on them to utilize their good taste in rendering invaluable opinions about various products.

"If the people of Kansas City tell us they didn't buy (a sample product) because they didn't like the flavor, the company might go back and rethink the flavor," said Susan Irwin, public relations director at Dancer Fitzgerald Sample, the nation's 13th largest advertising agency.

"If everybody hated the product, they probably would not take it any further," said Irwin, adding Kansas City is on the recommended lists of most marketers and advertisers.

Questionnaires and sampling wars proliferate in Kansas City because it is considered one of the most average cities in the United States, based on a comparison of national averages on household size, age, labor force, income, educational and racial makeup which fall closely in line with Kansas City numbers.

Marketers say other advantages are lower media costs and the fact that Kansas City doesn't overlap with other major markets.

"It's big enough to get a statistically valid reading and it's small enough it doesn't cost a fortune to advertise a product to introduce it," said Martin Baier, an insurance company vice president, author, consultant and adjunct professor of marketing at the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

"We're not one of the top cities, but we're getting a lot of action," added Ellen Dimbert, president of one of Kansas City's larger marketing research firms, The Field House.

Dimbert said the top four marketing firms in the area talk to at least 170,000 people a year — "and that's on the low side." In addition, there are an unknown number of outof-state firms with WATS lines that call into the area to survey residents.

Among national companies that have asked Kansas Citians their opinions are Frito-Lay and Duncan Hines, trying to outgun each other's cookies in the store aisles.

McDonald's McRib sandwich and Happy Meal, Proctor & Gamble beauty bars and new and different greeting cards from Hallmark have all received scrutiny from Kansas

At one point during Frito-Lay's cookie testing in 1982, pundits were saying World War III had broken out in the grocery store aisles in Kansas City. Frito-Lay, previously not a purveyor of cookies, captured a significant share of the local market with its new Grandma's Cookies, prompting national marketing.

Keebler, Stouffer Foods, Hershey, Kraft, Norton Simon, Nabisco and H.J. Hines also have risked their products to the good taste of Kansas Ci-

For Kansas City residents, this means many of the 1.35 million people in the area have sampled their way through various tasting and product differentiation wars, making it likely everybody in the area has been involved in the marketing studys.

"The city is large enough that people get an opportunity that once or twice a year they get to give their opinions," Dimbert said.

In suburban Overland Park, Field House interviewers dart daily about Oak Park Mall rounding up potential interviewees, some of whom have been through the drill before.

"It's always a different product, different questions," said Tee Whitt of Lenexa, who has tasted pizza, peas and soft drinks and fielded questions in the five or six times she has been stopped by various queriers.

Betty Dahlin, who also was in Oak Park Mall that noon, said she has participated in 15 to 20 questionings.

Alcohol week has new emphasis

Halls focus on alternatives

By TONI OGLESBY Collegian Reporter

Over-emphasis on alcohol education this year has led to a low-key approach to National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week by the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls.

Alcohol awareness week begins today and runs through Friday with a new format by KSUARH.

"This year we're approaching things a little differently," said Rosanne Proite, assistant director of the Department of Housing.

Proite is responsible for coordinating the event in the residence

"With the change in the drinking age and the intensive, concentrated attention that has been placed on this change, its effects on our policies and programs, we (the housing department and the hall governing boards) felt that to have another big push on alcohol awareness would be too much," Proite said. "We've been alcohol educated to death this year."

This decision has resulted in a less structured alcohol awareness week than in the past. Instead of concentrating on responsible drinking or alcohol education, the halls will approach the situation from a more positive perspective.

Because a majority of the students who live in the residence halls are not of legal drinking age, alternatives to drinking and Aggieville will be areas of concentration this week, Proite said.

"The only system-wide, residence hall program will be the first Hall Governing Board Nonalcoholic Beverage Challenge," Proite said.

Each residence hall may choose whether or not to participate.

The two categories are ice cream drinks and non-ice cream drinks and each hall governing board can enter only one recipe in each category, Proite explained.

While this week can be used for the HGBs to choose the drinks they want to enter, the actual contest will be Oct. 29 and 30.

An event taking place in Topeka on Tuesday will give recognition to the University for observing the national alcohol awareness week. "The big news as far as I'm concerned is that Gov. John Carlin will sign an official proclamation declaring Oct. 20-26 as Kansas Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week," Proite said.

Several students from K-State and the University of Kansas will be present for the signing.

These are the only noted events the housing department has announced for the week.

The residence hall governing boards have planned their own programs for the first time because of previous extensive focus on alcohol.

The halls are individually sponsoring programs including a speaker from a local chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving; a anonymous caller claiming to speak for the kidnappers of four Soviets said Sunday they have killed a second captive and dumped his body near the Cite Sportive stadium in south Beirut, the Voice of Lebanon radio reported.

Regents' decision wise

sburg, the Kansas Board of Regents wisely denied a request to enlarge the Presidential Search Committee to include more faculty and student representatives.

The decision leaves the membership roster at 15, composed of three students, three faculty, six alumni, one dean and two ex-officio members.

The request came after the regents added three alumni to the original committee, prompting K-State faculty and student leaders to call for equal increases in their respective sectors.

Actions backing the sentiments of the two groups include the passing of a Student Senate resolution Sept. 26, stating students were "appalled and dismayed" by the regent's action and a Faculty Senate resolution, passed Oct. 1, also expressing dissatisfaction with the committee's structure.

During the regent's meeting, Charles Reagan, professor of philosophy and president of

In its Friday meeting at Pitt- Faculty Senate, said the naming of six alumni to the committee indicates a mistrust of faculty as well as a feeling that alumni are more important than faculty in the search for a new University president.

While it is understandable that each sector wants to be represented, there are no set formulas on establishing the ultimate committee.

Also, it has been nearly four months since President Acker announced his intention to resign.

Preconceived ideas that factions are inevitable, prompting the desire by each group for more representation, is not an efficient method to choose a president.

By virtue of their past experiences in interviewing and hiring personnel, and in view of the time frame, perhaps it is the alumni representatives who will get the committee off the ground and working to the intended goal of selecting the best possible candidates for the position.

Grenada anniversary should be celebrated

This week marks the second anniversary of the liberation of Grenada. Several members of Congress plan to make sure this event is recognized and that something can be learned about our involvement in Grenada and about the advancing forces of communism.

Congressmen Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., and Ike Skelton, D-Mo., are spearheading the effort by introducing House Joint Resolution 313 to Congress. The resolution is a proclamation designating the week of Oct. 20, 1985 as "The Lessons of Grenada Week." There were more than 125 bipartisan cosponsors of the resolution.

Through this week there are planned debates, forums and discussions dealing with what can be learned from Grenada, which will take place on more than 250 college campuses across the nation. Many national civic organizations are also taking part. The list includes the Jaycees, College Republicans, Lions International and Campus Crusade for

The resolution points out that the week should be used so the American people can learn about actual Communist behavior from the 35,000 pounds of documents relating to the Communist Party, Communist government of Grenada and to Grenada's relations with Cuba, the Soviet Union and Nicaragua.

The Department of State and the Department of Defense have recently published a collection of key documents titled "Grenada Documents: An Overview and Selection." The book is a compilation of the most incriminating evidence - ranging from top secret documents to minutes of meetings with the Soviet defense minister - that iustifies America's intervention in Grenada.

Gingrich points out the many reasons why we should study the lessons of Grenada, starting with the realization that the Communist threat is still very real.

The congressman also points out that, "Unfortunately, even though this concrete evidence that Grenada was ruled by a brutal Communist dictatorship is overwhelming, many people find it too difficult to believe and deny it altogether. This denial attitude may adversely affect American security in future conflicts."

A quick look through the collection of documents will show anyone the threat that was building in our backyard. The selection of documents contains several of the treaties that gave Grenada a vast quantity of armaments as well as military and political training from aggressive Communist coun-

The most interesting document that summarized the Communist goals in our hemisphere was the minutes from a meeting between the chiefs of general staff of Soviet armed forces and the People's Revolutionary armed forces of Grenada. The highlight of the meeting occurred when Marshal Ogarkov, chief of staff of Soviet armed forces, said, "Nineteen years ago we had only Cuba. Today we have Cuba, Nicaragua and Grenada and the battlefield is El Salvador. We are making progress."

So what have we learned from Grenada? We have learned Communists systematically undermine democratic values such as freedom of speech, religion and political Communists continue to lie. This was proven by the documents showing the many contradictions in public statements from the Grenadian government.

Some very positive aspects grew out of the liberation of Grenada. We found that communism is reversable. Decisive action by the United States and five Caribbean nations led to a victory over communism. This was a dramatic blow to the Brezhnev Doctrine, devised by former Soviet Premier Leonid Brezhnev, which states once a country goes Communist, it will always be Communist.

The liberation of Grenada was not a military victory, but a moral victory where the oppressive forces of communism were turned back in order to rescue over 1,000 American medical students and to restore political, religious and social freedom to the people of Grenada

KSDB gifts vital, timely

Chronicle Broadcasting, Inc. of Wichita has the right idea. Last week it donated a radio tower, valued at over $75,000 to KSDB-FM. With the new tower, KSDB-FM will increase its potential listeners from 38,000 to 128,000.

The donation, made in the interest of education and localism (addressing the needs of local concerns before those of nonlocal ones) is certain to give students and surrounding area residents a greater sense of cohesiveness and community spirit.

If it weren't for Chronicle Broadcasting's dedication to localism, future years could have seen K-Staters listening to University of Kansas students for entertainment, news and public opinion. KU had expressed an interest in expanding its radio coverage into the Manhattan area, an interest that while admirably zealous, Chronicle Broadcasting chose to ignore in favor of the smaller, struggling KSDB-FM.

In many ways, Chronicle Broadcasting can be credited with "saving the day" from KU encroachment in much the same way as the city of Manhattan did in 1871. At that time, the founders of K-State were considering a move from "college hill" (at the corner of College Avenue and Claflin) to K-State's current location.

Organizers of the state university in Lawrence had made repeated attempts to consolidate Manhattan's agricultural college with Lawrence's nstitution. The proposed move, many Manhattanites believed, would make K-State's independence especially vulnerable to the Kansas Legislature. City residents found a solution, though, by passing a $12,000 bond election which purchased land at K-State's current location.

The donation of land by the city of Manhattan in 1871 may well have been the crucial turning point that allowed K-State to develop as a separate, viable university.

Similarly, the donation of the radio tower today is likely to be the turning point for KSDB-FM and indeed for the university as a

Palestinians, host countries should work together

Editor,

Re: letters to the editor in the Oct. 14 Collegian from Abdul Hakim Sherahe, senior in electrical engineering, and Kayed Khalil, senior in electrical engineering, (members of the Palestinian Student Organization):

As has been typical of Palestinian advocates for decades, these two individuals assert the TRUTH of selective historical and political interpretations. I wish to offer an alternative set of facts for the readership's interpretation of truth.

Fact: The Palestine Liberation Organization trains guerrilla soldiers for military action against Israel, Israelis and their supporters wherever and whoever they may be (recall the Munich Olympics, the repeated hijacking of outside nations' air and now sea carriers, lethal assaults on targets within the state of Israel such as shopping centers, playgrounds, public schools, kindergartens, apartment houses, farming communities, commuter buses, all strategic military targets, and most recently a civilian sailing yacht docked in a Cypriot harbor.

Fact: The "previous Israeli-Arabic wars" cited in Sherahe's letter with but a single exception were initiated by armed invasion of Israel proper, and in that exception (The Six Days War) the Israeli army encountered battle-ready combined Arab military poised for 'exercises' at all of its borders!

Fact: Palestinians exist as "displaced persons" within the countries that urged them to vacate their homes and offered them shelter 37 years ago. That they remain refugees today is tragic and a damning indictment of their host nations. (So much for Pan-Arabic brotherhood and nationalism!)

Israeli citizens similarly once were forced to flee their homelands, the majority having fled the same Arab nations that host today's Palestinians. The difference: Israel offers its immigrants what safe haven it can as well as a new homeland and full citizenship.

The Palestinians' plight is sinful and must be alleviated. This can come about only when all parties (the Palestinians, their host Arab countries and Israel) work together peacefully to solve the problem.

Unfortunately, for 37 years Arab nations have defined their relationship with Israel in military, not political, terms. More to the point, for the past 25 years Palestinian paramilitary groups have redefined the confrontation in terms of terrorism that respects no national borders and sanctuary.

Events of the last two weeks demonstrate to the Palestinians that they, like the Israelis and their allies, can be targets in the war whose tactics and rules they defined.

Street preachers give useful advice

"Repent" was Jesus' first word as he began preaching (Matthew 4:17), and maybe it was a word you heard first-hand. (Remember the street preachers?)

Through gentle and harsh words, Jesus showed mankind the way to have a right relationship with God. Consider this: If you really care about people, you will love them with kind words and acts; also you will love them with the correction and guidance they need to keep them from harm.

And how should correction and guidance be received? I guess it all depends on you. Here's a biblical clue: "The way of a fool seems right to him, but a wise man listens to

Did you notice that those preachers weren't perfect? Well, Christians aren't perfect, but faithful Christians trust in one who is perfect. A jar of clay with great treasure inside is a vivid biblical illustration of what a Christian is. Please don't close your heart to the truth of what you heard just because you didn't like the "jar of clay" and his style.

As a follower of Jesus and a sister in the Lord to those preachers, I just humbly want to ask you to receive some advice regarding what you heard on Friday. Be honest with yourself. Consider what you heard. Check it with the Bible. (Read the Bible while you're able.)

I've been thinking about what I heard, looking it up in the Bible, taking the good and letting any chaff (yes, there was some) blow

This letter is written with concern and love because hell is a real place and Jesus is the way to a complete life now and also in heaven forever. Consider Jesus.

Israel takes land

Palestinians are scattered all over the world because Zionists occupied Palestine in 1948, massacring Palestinians and driving them out of their homeland. Ever since we have been hearing only one half of their story.

People should start realizing what is happening around the world and especially in Israel. When Meir Kahane, member of Knesset, says he wants all Palestinians killed or kicked out of Israel to the neighboring countries, it seems to me to be the same as what the Nazis wanted to do not long ago. This is really an irony.

Be fair and think of what you would do if you were kicked out of your homeland and not given the right to return.

Director to speak on saving energy

The topic of Tuesday's Early Bird Brigade Breakfast will be "Ten Ways Businesses Can Save Energy," featuring Dick Hayter, director of cooperative extension.

The University and Manhattan Chamber of Commerce are sponsoring the series, which begins at 7 a.m. in the University Ramada Inn lower level. The discussion is open to the public and breakfast pur-Hayter joined the University engineering faculty in 1974 after being director of the Kansas Energy Office.

Nomination deadline draws closer

Of the University's 1,800 staff members, one will be $500 richer in March when President Duane Acker announces the 1986 Classified Employee of the Year.

A nominee, employed part time or in a permanent position, must have completed at least one year of University service by Dec. 31, said Darwin Liverance, director of personnel services and coordinator of the KSU Classified Employee Recognition Program. The deadline to submit names is Nov. 20. Nomination forms were mailed to faculty and staff a week ago.

Members of the KSU Classified Affairs Committee will review the candidates and narrow the field to 18 semifinalists in December. The committee will narrow the field to six finalists in January.

Unpredictable influenza virus catching

By MARY A. BEGGS Staff Writer

It's called the influenza virus.

The virus is highly contagious but no one knows when it can strike or where. Perhaps it will infect only one person in a class, while it can strike the majority of students who live on a residence hall floor. Often it incapacitates students in fraternities or sororities for weeks.

Aches, pains, nausea, fever and headaches are the symptoms. Asprin, rest and fluids are the cure, doctors say.

The flu can be contracted year round, but the best time to catch the flu is during flu season. Flu season runs from the first part of October to the end of February, but doctors have yet to discover why the flu occurs more frequently during these

"The flu is like a real bad cold," said Dr. Larry Moeller, physician at Flu season continues until February

Lafene Student Health Center.

Having the flu can be uncomfortable, or a person may experience only very mild aches and pains. Most people recover from the symptoms in a week or two, Moeller said.

But respiratory infections such as pneumonia and other complications can make the flu a very serious disease. "Severe complications from the flu can result in death. But this is very uncommon," Moeller

Vaccination is recommended for those people with a higher than average risk of infection from the influenza virus. People with some type of chronic illness such as anemia, diabetes or immunological impairments should consider receiving an influenza immunization shot,

"For the average healthy college student (the shot) is not recommended," Moeller said. "It is their choice."

If a person does decide to be im-munized he should do so in late October or early November. Getting vaccinated before this time is not recommended because protection may decrease by spring when outbreaks frequently occur.

The vaccination reduces a persons chance of contracting the flu by 70 percent to 80 percent, according to medical data.

There are three types of the virus prevalent this year. The APhilippine strain, AChile strain and the BUSSR

"Influenza A and B viruses are tricky devils," Moeller said. charge.

"Anyone vaccinated last year needs to revaccinated this year.'

The influenza vaccine is not effective against every type of the virus. Protection is only provided for those types of influenza for which the vaccine is prepared or for closely related types.

Most people who are vaccinated have no adverse reaction to the immunization, Moeller said. In some instances tenderness at the sight of injection or flu-type symptoms may occur. Side effects are usually not severe and only last one or two days.

One of the only groups of people who are advised against immunization are people with allergies to eggs.

"Because egg products are used to develop the vaccine, people allergic to eggs should not receive the shots, Moeller said.

Influenza vaccinations are available at Lafene. There is a $3

Alumni return for Smurthwaite's 25th

By BECKY WEBER Collegian Reporter

It was a time to step back and remember for Smurthwaite women and alumnae. Smurthwaite cooperative house celebrated its 25th anniversary this weekend with a banquet and dance Saturday night and an open house and rededication ceremony Sunday afternoon.

Deb Varner, senior in early childhood development and chairperson of the anniversary celebration, said the weekend "was fun and everything went smoothly."

"We had about 80 Smurthwaite women and alumae at the banquet. It was excellent," Varner said.

Denise Middleton, senior in speech pathology, provided singing entertainment at the banquet. Other highlights were speeches by Janelle Hildebrand, junior in pre-nursing and president of the house, and her mother, Mary Strahm Hildebrand, the first president of Smurthwaite.

About 100 alumnae visited the house on Sunday. There were representatives from every class since Smurthwaite opened in 1960, Varner said. Michelle Nyhart, senior in speech pathology and audiology, rededicated the house with a speech about Smurthwaite.

Ruth Hoeflin, former dean of the College of Home Economics, also spoke on Sunday about the opening of Smurthwaite in 1960

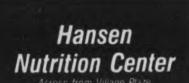

"It was really interesting to listen to Dr. Hoeflin and hear about the things that happened when Smurthwaite was first opened," Varner said. "It was neat to hear from someone who knew Georgiana Smurthwaite (the founder of the house) herself. "It was also neat to talk to the first women who moved into Smurthwaite, the ones who had to live in West Stadium while the house was being built," Varner said. "They talked about living there while the football games were going on. It was also interesting to see what rules and regulations have changed since then."

"It was wonderful. The weekend was good for the house," Nyhart said. "It made everyone step back and look at it and realize that it is pretty neat to live here."

Shirley Brewey, a 1980 graduate and an alumna of Smurthwaite, visited the house on Sunday after-

"I enjoyed the reception. It was fun reminiscing about old times. It was special to see old friends again people have really changed a lot."

Photographer to discuss art

By GISELE MCMINIMY Collegian Reporter

Grant Heilman, a well-known agricultural photographer and writer, will speak about the creativity of photography Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Union 206.

Heilman, who has had several photographs appear on the covers of Time, Fortune, U.S. News & World Report and Forbes magazines, will show examples of his photography and hold a discussion period during the Oct. 22 meeting of the K-State National Agri-Marketing Association (NAMA).

"I'm in favor of creating photographs rather than just taking them," Heilman said.

He began his own business in stock photography 30 years ago, Heilman

Stock photography is a practice photographers take where photographs and sell or lease them to publications, marketing or advertising agencies.

Heilman said his business, Grant Heilman Photography, has about 200,000 photographs related to agriculture and natural sciences on file. The photographs are sold all over the United States, Western Europe, Canada and Japan.

Heilman has written and edited several books including "Farm Town," a book based on the photographs of an agricultural photographer in the 1930s and 1940s named Wes McManigal.

He has also written and used his own photographs for a book titled "Wheat Country" and for a book he is currently working on tentatively titled "The American Cropland."

Traveling across the country and doing photography is something Heilman said he enjoys. He is currently on a harvest trip where he is taking photographs of the corn and bean harvest.

Heilman said he is a member of NAMA, the parent organization of the K-State chapter, and therefore talks to college groups throughout the country as he travels.

John Riley, adviser to K-State NAMA, said several people here have been impressed with the fact that Heilman is coming to K-State.

'We really didn't have a good idea of who we had until we received some reaction from people here," Riley said.

Heilman lives in Buena Vista, Colo. with his wife, Barbara Whipple, who is also a writer.

Minister cites feminist writer

By The Collegian Staff

If scripture is used in fighting the political struggles of feminists today, it is obvious that religion in the feminist movement cannot be ignored, said a local minister at the Friday Focus on Women.

The book, "In Memory of Her" by Elizabeth Schussler Fiorenza, a Christian feminist writer, was the subject of a presentation by Rod Saunders, campus minister of Ecumenical Christian Ministeries, titled "Feminist Reconstruction of Christian Origins" at the noon Friday Focus on Women.

The biblical language is centered around man, Saunders said. The result is that scholars have translated such inclusive language both as generic and gender specific. An example that Fiorenza uses is that while translators would refuse to translate "brothers" in the letters of Paul with "brothers and sisters," they assume the Christian communities that Paul wrote to consisted of "brothers and sisters." Fiorenza stated in her book, "If feminists think they can neglect the revision of the Bible because there are more pressing political issues, then they do not recognize the political impact of scripture upon the churches and society, and also upon the lives of women."

"I am trying to to make it clear and understandable what this Christianity was and is, especially in regard to feminist concerns," Saunders said.

Fiorenza believes that Western women cannot discard their Christian history. Women must use their religious history to work for their liberation and not be oppressed by it.

"Are we not beyond the effects, or the significance of religion? Cannot women's liberation do its proper work and ignore religion, or act as if religious experience is passe?"

India tests nuclear plant fuel

By The Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India - A test nuclear reactor using a new type of fuel has started up in southern India, the head of the atomic energy program announced.

The 14-megawatt fast-breeder reactor began operating Friday near an ancient seasqide Hindu temple at

Mahabalipuram, said Raja Ramanna, head of India's Atomic Energy

Ramanna said the nuclear plant is the first to use a plutonium-uranium carbide fuel. It does not require enriched uranium, a product not made in India.

Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi recently told the National Defense College here that, "We have demonstrated that even if we have the capability, we have the will for not proliferating the nuclear arms

But he hinted that New Delhi may be forced to revise its nuclear policy if neighboring Pakistan were to acquire atomic weapons.

Ag college gets down to dirt in folly games

By GISELE MCMINIMY Collegian Reporter

"PULL! PULL! PULL!" echoed through Weber Arena as bodies strained, feet thrust deep into brown dirt and faces grimaced with exertion while one team tried to pull the other into its territory.

Next to the Tug of War competition, team members jumped, stretched, and occasionally fell in a desperate attempt to return the volleyball to the other side of the net.

Several team members were doused in a cold bath of water as balloons burst in midair and splashed over them in the water balloon throwing contest.

People moved about cheering for their favorite teams, laughing and joking during the tournament competition at the Ag Fall Follies Sunday.

"This (Ag Fall Follies) lets us get into our shorts and tennis shoes and have some fun," said Mark Religa, senior in agriculture education and member of the Agriculture Education team. "It's fun to watch our professors participate and it gives us something different to do on a Sunday afternoon."

"We've only participated in one event so far," said Miles McKee early in the day. "We lost 15-0 in volleyball, but we're here having fun and that's what counts," said McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry and faculty team member of the Animal Sciences and Industry team.

McKee's team is the only team representing an individual class, most of the other teams are made up of departmental clubs and other agriculture groups, said Carey Avery, junior in bakery science and coordinator of the Ag Fall Follies Core Commit-

Members of the Dairy Science Club decided to have fun with their team name, said Jeff Ochampaugh, junior in agricultural economics and member of the Friends of the Fistula team.

"We have a party every year called the Friends of the Fistula because we work a lot with fistulated cows," Ochampaugh said.

"We thought it would be a fun name to use for the competition."

Ochampaugh said a fistulated cow is one that has a hole in its side, enabling it to be studied for research.

Dave Mugler, associate dean for the College of Agriculture and director of resident instruction for the college, said the team he was on, the Agriculture Ambassadors, had a little trouble at the beginning of their Tug of War competition.

"Someone had tied our end of the rope to the wall and they started the pull before I could get it undone. The knot finally came loose after a few seconds," Mugler said. Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture and member of the Agriculture Ambassador team, hopes the enthusiasm generated at the Ag Fall Follies will carry over to the College of Agriculture.

"The most interesting thing to me is the team spirit each group is showing by participating in the program," Woods said. "Hopefully that team spirit will transfer to each department and the college as a whole."

The overall winner of the Ag Fall Follies was the Agriculture Education team. The Agricultural Economics No. 2 team placed second, the Agricultural Mechanization team placed third and the Horsemen's Association team placed fourth.

In addition to the three types of competition for students and faculty, a pie eating contest was held for the faculty members on the teams, Avery said.

A lifesaver was placed in the bottom of a pie pan and covered with whipped cream. The faculty members had to find the lifesaver without using their hands. Points from winning the contest went toward their team, Avery said. Bryan Schurle, professor of agricultural economics won the contest for the Agricultural Economics No. 2 team.

The idea behind the Ag Fall Follies was to sponsor a fun activity so students in the College of Agriculture could get together and have a fun time. Avery said.

"This will probably be an annual event for the college," Avery said. "I'm sure we'll probably do this again next year and add some more things."

more things."

Teams had eight to 10 members and were required to have one faculty member, Avery said. If a club or group had enough team members they could enter two or more teams that had to compete separately. She said 20 teams competed.

Mike Torrey, senior in agriculture education and president of the Agriculture Student Council said the council wanted an activity that would not be alcohol-related.

"This shows you can still have fun without alcohol being involved. Non-alcoholic programs are going to become more successful with the change in drinking ages," Torrey said.

McKee said he thinks Ag Fall Follies is a worthwhile program.

"We need to enjoy things, relax and have fun," he said.

Rural bankers organizing for farm, ag lending bills

By The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — A group of 100 rural bankers from throughout the country met Sunday in Des Moines to organize a lobbying drive to support legislation they hope will help family farms, and rural banks, survive.

"I think farmers realize there are big problems on both sides and there has to be some resolution and some ways to solve those problems or those farmers are going down the drain and the family banks or community banks are going down with them," said banker Bernard Griffiths of Long Island, Kan.

"Bankers for Agriculture" was founded last week by Mendon, Ill., banker Don Schoch, after a lobbying trip to Washington. Schoch is chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the Mendon State Bank.

Ninety percent of the Mendon State Bank's $12 million in loans are to farmers, Schoch said.

"While I was in Washington, I felt that there was a force in action from large corporate organizations that were lobbying there for bills that weren't necessarily in the best interests of improving our agricultural situation. What we need now is a price for these farmers. They need to be able to have a profit for their efforts," Schoch said.

Schoch's original lobbying effort was on behalf of the Farm Credit Relief Act, sponsored by Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill. But Schoch said he came back to Illinois convinced that if banks are to survive, so must the farmers they serve. So he started rallying rural bankers to organize in support of the 1985 Farm Bill sponsored by Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa.

Dixon's bill would allow banks to write off troubled agricultural loans over a 30-year period, rather than immediately, as now required by federal bank regulators.

By Sunday's meeting in Des Moines, about 100 bankers from throughout the United States were interested enough to spend the day listening to details about the Dixon and Harkin bills and discuss how to promote their passage.

FarmAid not likely to end crisis on farm

Everyone wants to help the farmers.

It must be a matter of obligation or something, because not only does everyone on Capitol Hill seem to take an interest right now, but every rock and country singer who's had a taste of the "back woods" at one time or another wants to get involved.

Don't get me wrong, I'm not against legislative action favoring the farmers, nor am I against public awareness of the current farming dilemma which has been sweeping the country.

What is aggravating and almost sad, however, is that before now farmers received very little respect for their efforts out in the field, or wherever they might be working.

Is the concern over the farm situation going to become a fad?

While talking to friends who spent most of their years on the streets and sidewalks instead of the crop fields and feedlots, I have received words of sympathy because of my past and current involvement in agriculture.

"It must be terrible being a farmer," they say. "Everyone is going broke. I really do feel sorry for all you students in agriculture."

Times may be rough right now, and no doubt they are going to to remain the same for some time. But pity alone, we don't need. Too many people don't truly understand HAMILTON Agriculture Editor the problem — so how about a short history lesson?

RUSTIN

Like any salable product, it all has to do with supply and demand.

Back in the '70s, farming was a great business. Grain prices were hitting the clouds, inflation was up, interest rates were down and the Soviets had a huge appetite. Agriculture was living in a world of fantasy.

Time brings changes however, and just when everyone thought it was safe to farm, inflation dropped, the value of the dollar soared and suddenly no one wanted to buy wheat from the good ole United States for one major reason — they couldn't afford it.

major reason — they couldn't afford it.

Importing nations saw less expensive prices on the grains menu and started ordering immediately. This left many of the farmers out in the cold, especially when the overabundance of farmers started to saturate the grains market. This of course led to lower grain prices, which, along with many other factors, led to the financial problems farmers are facing today.

Willie Nelson had a great idea when he started FarmAid. Raise $50 million, gain some national attention and provide some good entertainment at the same time. Nearly one month and $9 million later, he says he's going to do it again — this time in New York City at Yankee Stadium.

James Cagney is even getting into the act. Nelson said the 86-year-old Cagney "got in touch with me before FarmAid and wanted to know what he could do to help. He's got a deep interest in the problem, maybe because he lives on a farm up there in Connecticut."

He says the city people need to be exposed to the current farm problems — therefore he decided to educate the people in New York City.

I hope it works.

If people understand the problem, maybe FarmAid's efforts will be more justified, and instead of receiving sympathy, the farmers will simply be understood.

I sincerely hope this is the case. If Nelson's plan works out to perfection, people will give the farmers the respect they have always deserved, and it is hoped they continue to give it — even when the farm problems are solved.

Survey studies doughnut quality

Patrons express preferences

By DONNA COPE Collegian Reporter

"It's time to make the doughnuts...it's time to make the doughnuts!" The guy on the Dunkin' Donuts commercial isn't the only person who is heard saying these words. This cry might be heard as early as 4:30 a.m. at the Union, as employees prepare for the busy day ahead of them.

The Union Food Service has recently completed a doughnut survey. Customers were asked to fill out questionnaires to determine the variety of doughnuts most preferred, said Becky Lind, Union dietician.

The survey was done over a twoday period. Surveys were available at three places in the Union: the doughnut counter, the entrance to the cafeteria and the cashier's desk. Lind said any customer buying a doughnut was asked to fill out one of the surveys. The survey was provided free-ofcharge by the manufacturer of the Lind said one of the goals of the survey was to determine whether The southern glaze doughnut or not the customers were willing was rated above average to to pay an additional cost for doughnuts with special toppings.

The majority of those surveyed did not want the present cost of 20 or greasy cents each or two doughnuts for 35 cents increased, Lind said. Four kinds of doughnuts were included in the survey: regular, southern glaze, devil's food and deluxe. The doughnuts included are made from mixes. Lind said the popular twist doughnut was not included in the survey because it is a raised bakery product and it wouldn't be cost efficient for the Union to consider raising the price.

Customers were asked to rank the doughnuts in two categories, quality and texture. The survey also listed twelve toppings and asked customers to rank their top choices. The top choices are vanilla glaze, chocolate glaze, coconut and chopped almond topp-

In the quality and textures categories, the regular doughnut received average to above average rankings on a scale of one to five one being outstanding and five being poor. A great majority of the customers thought the regular doughnut was moist.

The chocolate devil's food doughnut was ranked average to above average and was given a moist ranking. Professionals who participated in taste testing said the devil's food doughnuts were "just right in sweetness, with not as much grease."

The deluxe doughnut is a very heavy product, according to Lind. She said that many of those surveyed were confused when rating the deluxe product. People were judging the topping versus the doughnut product. The overall ranking of the deluxe doughnut was above average and moist.

Lind said the Union makes about 1,200 doughnuts each day. One hundred pounds of mix is used to make the 100 dozen doughnuts. Lind said this number frequently increases when outside orders are placed by campus or area organizations.

Doughnuts are usually available until 10:30 a.m. Lind said she has received a lot of feedback from students who would like the doughnuts" available until noon. She said it would be unlikely the Union will increase the serving time because it is not cost efficient.

City board to discuss rezoning

By TOM SCHULTES Manhattan Editor

The advisability of allowing commercial development in heavy industrial areas, particularly in southeast Manhattan, will face scrutiny at tonight's meeting of the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board.

The discussion of a report, requested by the board of city planners, stems from a rezoning proposal in a Heavy-Industrial District generally bordered by Yuma Street to the north and Juliette Avenue to the west in the southeast section of the city.

The rezoning request was presented to the board last month by Ross and Steve Ballard to allow part of a warehouse at 601 South Fifth St. to be used for a party facility for occasions such as reunions, weddings and dinners. The structure is owned and used by Ballard's Sporting Goods, 1218 Moro St.

Although the idea of such a facility in the neighborhood was attractive to some board members, questions were raised as to the neighborhood's ability to absorb extra traffic caused by commercial rezoning and the reduced availability of industrialzoned property for heavy industrial usage. The rezoning would also be in violation of the neighborhood's current land use plan.

In action concerning downtown redevelopment, the board will conduct a public hearing to consider rezoning a tract of land from I-2, Industrial Park District to C-5, Service-Commercial District. The rezoning is requested by Griffith Lumber Co., 231 Pierre St., to allow the company to relocate to the north side of Highway 24, east of Levee Drive.

The company is being forced to relocate for construction of the Manhattan Regional Shopping Mall. Other discussion will focus on a proposal to develop property at 321 N. Delaware St. by S & B Development Company. Manhattan architect Jim Jones will present the plans to the board. City Planner Larry Hulse said city staff had not been presented any preliminary indication of what the proposal would include.

The planning board meets at 7 p.m. in the City Commission Meeting Room of the city's Administrative Building, 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue. All meetings are open to the public.

A terrifying vision of human nature results from Peter Brook's filming of the William Golding novel about a group of boys stranded on an island and faced with survival. Civilization is quickly forgotten as the band of boys evolve downward into savagery and anarchy, where brute force and blind authority come to be the standards of behavior. Some of the scenes are brutal, as when the boys hunt down a pig for food, and when one of the group (a boy called of all things "Piggy") is sentenced to death and executed

Wildcats continue losing ways in 38-7 loss

By TODD NIGHSWONGER Sports Editor

LAWRENCE - With 2:46 left in the game between K-State and the University of Kansas, a KU official slowly carried the Governor's Cup - awarded to the winning team in this intrastate rivalry - from K-State's locker room to Kansas' side of the field.

The cup probably should have been taken across at halftime.

Yes, the Jayhawks pushed the Wildcats further into the depths of winlessness with a 38-7 thrashing of 0-6 K-State. KU led 17-0 at halftime thanks to the mistake-prone Wildcats.

"I thought we just self-destructed today," said a disappointed K-State Head Coach Lee Moon. "I thought we were ready to play and executed early. I thought we came in with a good game plan. We moved the ball."

Unlike past 1985 losses when the K-State offense had trouble moving the football, the Wildcat offense found some success against the Jayhawk defense, which came into the game ranked just 75th in the country.

Right now it's tough. This is my senior year and we're 0-6. This is probably the worst I have ever felt about any football situation.' -Barton Hundley

On the first play of the game, Wildcat senior tailback John Kendrick took the handoff from quarterback Randy Williams, broke through the left end and scampered

K-State free safety

38 yards down to the KU 41-yard line. But after a loss of three yards by Kendrick and two incomplete passes, K-State was forced to punt. Even though the drive fizzled, Kendrick's long run broke the ice for K-State and gave the 'Cats the momentum to carry them through the scoreless first quarter. But on the third play of the second period, Williams' pass, intended for tight end Kent Dean, was picked off by Jayhawk free safety Wayne Ziegler, who returned the interception 31 yards untouched for a touchdown. "Our defense played well for a while and then we threw the interception," Moon said. "The quarterback has to read the receivers and he chose the wrong receiver. When that happened, we just self-destructed."

And self-destruct the Wildcats did 33-yard run by fullback Ray Wilson early in the second quarter put K-State in good field position at its own 45. Three plays later K-State punted. Then on the 'Cats's next possession, a Williams pass ended up in KU cornerback Travis Hardy's hands at the Wildcat 43. Five plays later it was 14-0.

On the ensuing kickoff, K-State's James Witherspoon took the ball at the 15, cut across the grain and romped 64 yards down to the Jayhawk 21. Three running plays resulted in minus 2 yards, bringing on placekicker Mark Porter for a 40-yard field goal attempt.

Tailback Todd Moody, who was called on to hold the snap because of injuries to Barton Hundley and Brad Lambert, let the snap from Tim Stone sail through his hands. By the time Porter could corral the loose ball, it had rolled 35 yards toward the KU goal

"I never held the ball (for a field goal) in a game before," said Moody, who worked

Kansas took advantage of the botched field goal attempt by adding a three-pointer of its own to stake the Jayhawks to a 17-0 halftime lead.

"Anytime you have a play like that when you end up giving them points, it's going to affect you some," Moody said.

Still, the 'Cats were not out of the game if they could mount a charge in the second half. But tailback Lynn Williams, who rushed for 100 yards in the game on 20 carries, returned the opening kickoff 49 yards to the 50, taking the wind out of K-State's sails once again.

"We came out in the second half and felt like we still had a chance to win," Moon said. "We didn't cover the kick and we gave them momentum right off the bat. As soon as that happened, our kids went flat."

Kansas added 21 more points in the second half and K-State added another loss to its winless record.

"Right now it's tough. This is my senior year and we're 0-6," said free safety Hundley, one of K-State's co-captains. "This is probably the worst I have ever felt about any football situation."

If K-State should lose next Saturday at winless University of Missouri, Hundley may change his mind.

KU defenders hold K-State to single TD

By DAVID SVOBODA Assistant Sports Editor

LAWRENCE - On an overcast afternoon 40,000 fans saw a defense grow up right before their eyes.

The University of Kansas defense, which has been less than spectacular in recent weeks, allowed just seven points Saturday in turning in a sterling effort in the Jayhawks' 38-7 win over K-State.

Plays by Jayhawk defenders directly led to 21 KU points - 14 produced by the offense after K-State turned the ball over and seven produced by the Jayhawk defense itself.

The Jayhawk defense was but 1:51 away from posting its first shutout since 1981 when K-State got on the board on a 46-yard pass from reserve quarterback John Welch to Gerald Alphin. By then, however, the Jayhawks had most of their second-string defenders in the game and the contest was over except for the sound of the final gun.

Just how good was the Jayhawk defense? The statistics tell the story.

K-State was held to just 213 total yards for the contest and averaged just 3.2 yards per offensive play. K-State's starting quarterback, Randy Williams, completed as many passes to KU defensive backs as he did to his wide receivers - three.

The second quarter told the tale of just how good the KU defense was on Saturday. Although the 'Cats dominated the time of possession for the quarter, that was the only statistic they dominated.

KU held K-State to just one first down and 19 total yards for the quarter. K-State's John Kendrick, who had a 38-yard run in the first quarter, was held to minus five yards in the second.

K-State knew it would be a long quarter when KU defensive back Wayne Ziegler intercepted a Williams pass and returned it 31 yards for a touchdown to put the Jayhawks on top 7-0. The quarter was but 1:32 old when Ziegler moved into the end zone.

Ziegler said the play unfolded just like he had expected it to after seeing similar versions of the play on films all week in prac-

"In the films, they basically ran two patterns," he said. "One in, one out. I was sur prised he threw the ball. He was looking right at the tight end."

Another Jayhawk interception led to the second KU score of the day. Travis Hardy, who earlier in the week moved to cornerback from strong safety, picked off a Williams' pass on the K-State 43-yard line to put the KU offense in business. Five plays later, KU was in the end zone and had a 14-0

One Jayhawk defender whose individual efforts could not be overshadowed was linebacker Willie Pless.

Pless had 13 tackles on the day - eight unassisted and five assisted - and broke former K-State linebacker Gary Spani's Big Eight Conference career record of 543.

'The main thing about today's game that I'd like to emphasize is that I had a lot of fun and that's what it's all about," he said. When your team is 5-2 and appears headed for a bowl game, fun is easy to come by.

'Cats place 5th, 11th at Burger King meet

By TODD NIGHSWONGER Sports Editor

In what Head Coach Steve Miller called a bigger meet than the upcoming NCAA Championships, K-State's women's and men's cross country teams placed fifth and 11th, respectively, Saturday at the Wisconsin Burger King Invitational in Madison, Wis.

The women, ranked 15th in the country, finished better than four higher-ranked teams with 137 points. Miller said the women ran well despite running under their potential.

"We had a great meet and still didn't run the way I think we're capable," Miller said of the meet run in cold, wet weather that made the course slippery. "I said coming into the meet that if we finished in the top five we would be one of the top 10 teams in the country."

Jacque Struckhoff and Alysun Deckert paced the 'Cats' effort. Struckhoff finished eighth in 17 minutes, 26 seconds while Deckert was 10th in 17:34.

"I felt Jacque and Alysun ran as well as they are capable," Miller said.

Running third and fourth for K-State were Anne Stadler (28th) and Lisa Wakem (41st).

"We didn't get quality performances from Anne and Lisa," the coach said. "I think they were a little off." Winning the men's and women's titles was the University of Wisconsin. Big Eight foe Iowa State University was second in both competitions. Twelve teams each competed in the men's and women's portions of the meet, open only to teams that are ranked in the top 20 this year or scored points in the 1984 NCAA meet. While Miller was happy with the women's performance, things didn't go as well for the 15thranked men's team.

Bryon Lopez became hyperventilated and dropped out of the race after the first half mile.

"That (Lopez dropping out) did effect our team finish," Miller said. "However, we just didn't run well otherwise. I'm not really Bryan Carroll did the best for the K-State men, finishing 14th with a time of 20:56.

From there the men's performances tailed off. Ron Stahl was next at 34th, followed by Mike Rogers in 37th place and Jim Knudsen in 47th.

"I'm very disappointed with our performance. I think we're better than we performed today," Miller said. "There's no more time for excuses.'

Cards' 9th-inning comeback stuns KC

By The Associated Press KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Terry

Pendleton turned from defensive hero to offensive hero Sunday night with a three-run double in the ninth inning that gave St. Louis a 4-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals and a 2-0 lead in baseball's 82nd World Series Pendleton's two-out double capped a four-run inning off Royals' lefthander Charlie Leibrandt, who carried a two-hitter into the inning. It put the Cardinals in commanding position to win their second Series in four years.

Thirty-five times teams have won the first two games in a Series, and 27 times they have gone on to win. Game 3 Tuesday night will match Cardinals right-hander Joaquin Andujar, 21-12 during the season but largely ineffective the past month, against the Royals' ace, 21-year-old right-hander Bret Saberhagen, 20-6.

Willie McGee started the rally with a double down the left field line, only the third hit off Leibrandt. But McGee had to wait at second while Ozzie Smith grounded out and Tommy Herr flew out to shallow right.

Jack Clark, whose two-out, threerun homer in the ninth inning beat the Los Angeles Dodgers on Wednesday and gave the Cardinals the National League pennant, took three balls before he finally found one he could hit. He pulled it into left field between third and shortstop, scoring McGee with the first run of the night for St. Louis. Tito Landrum followed with a bloop double just fair down the right field line, sending Clark to third, and Ceasar Cedeno was walked intentionally. That brought up Pendleton, who turned a key double play Saturday night with a running, back-tothe-plate catch and throw.

Kansas City Manager Dick Howser had relief ace Dan Quisenberry warming in the bullpen, but he stuck with Leibrandt. It was the wrong decision. Pendleton hit a 2-1 pitch into the left field corner, scoring all three runners and chasing Leibrandt. Quisenberry came in, walked Darrell Porter intentionally and then got Andy Van Slyke on a popup to center to end the inning. But the damage had been done, and Leibrandt was a ninth-inning victim for the second time this postseason.

Leibrandt, in almost total control before the ninth, lost to Toronto last Saturday in Game 4 after taking a 1-0 lead into the last inning. After stranding leadoff hitters in each of the first three innings, the Royals finally made good on an opportunity in the fourth as Brett broke out of a brief postseason slump. Wilson led off the fourth with the

After losing three of the first four 1985 Big Eight Conference matches - including the last two - K-State's volleyball team got back on the winning track in conference action by defeating Iowa State University 15-9, 15-12 and 15-10 Friday night in Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats played Wichita State University Saturday in Ahearn and won again in three games 15-10, 15-5 and 15-4, moving K-State's overall record to 12-7.

The win against the Cyclones was the first since 1982 for the Wildcats and moved the 'Cats conference mark on the season to 2-3. It was a must-win match for K-State to remain in the conference race, according to K-State Coach Scott Nelson. "The Iowa State match was very important because there are four teams fighting for a spot in the top three in the conference," Nelson said. K-State is battling the Universities of Nebraska, Missouri and Oklahoma for top conference honors. The Wildcats were led by sophomore Mary Kinsey. She was successful on 13 kills on 30 attempts with only three errors. Her attacking percentage for the contest was 33

Senior Donna Lee also added to the offensive attack of the Wildcats as she contributed 11 kills for an attacking percentage of 47 percent. Lee also lead K-State in digs, registering 10 against the Cyclones three games of the match, but showed signs of confidence and fought back to win each game.

"We were very attentive in the Iowa State match," Nelson said. "We trailed in all three games but we showed good concentration and came back. That shows we are gaining confidence. Iowa State is a good volleyball team, we just didn't allow them to control the tempo as they have in the past."

The meeting with Wichita State was the third battle between the two teams this season, with the Wildcats coming out on top in each contest.

Again Lee was the offensive power for K-State connecting on 14 kills of 28 attempts and committing only two errors. Her attacking percentage was 42 percent.

Kinsey proved a key to the Wildcat defense as she recorded 14 digs against the Shocker offense. Helen Bundy and Shawnee Call each recorded two solo blocks for K-State.

"Once again, our execution and attentiveness were good," Nelson said. "We weren't quite as emotional as we were Friday night and that had me worried going in (to the WSU game). We executed our game plan and made them hit where we wanted them to, however, and came away with the victory.'

The conference season continues for the Wildcats Thursday as they travel to Norman, Okla., to take on the University of Oklahoma Sooners. On Friday and Saturday, K-State will play in the Oral Roberts Invitational in Tulsa, Okla.

Wilson, who was running on the pitch. Cox then got behind in the count to White, and the Royals' cleanup man hit a 3-1 pitch into the alley in left-center for a double that scored Brett.

The Royals finally had taken advantage of an opportunity against St. Louis. Kansas City had put the leadoff man on base seven times in the 12 previous innings of this World Series without coming up with a run.

Leibrandt, meanwhile, gave the Cardinals fits with his assortment of off-speed and breaking pitches. He struck out two batters each in the second, third and fifth innings. The only time he really got into trouble was the fourth, when the Cardinals had runners at the corners with two out only to come up empty.

The St. Louis fourth was the first time either team got two runners aboard in an inning, but Leibrandt was equal to the early challenge despite a poor previous record against the Cardinals. Leibrandt came to the Royals in 1983 from Cincinnati, with whom he was 2-3 in seven starts against the Cards.

Reinhardt said the board wanted to add individuals familiar with the mission of the regents' institutions and Manhattan community.

According to Owen Koeppe, University provost and ex-officio committee member, the respective presidents of Faculty Senate, Student Senate and KSU Alumni Association were each asked in late August to submit four candidate names to the board. At that time the regents planned to select just two people from each constituency, Koeppe said.

However, the regents decided to appoint three candidates from the original list of alumni candidates instead of two - for a total of six. Alumni members selected by the board from the original list are: C.Q. Chandler, Wichita banker; Nelson Galle, Hesston businessman; and Gilbert Johnson, Colorado Springs contractor.

Wichita banker and former regent Frank Lowman and Manhattan businesswoman Jan Ray were not among the original list of alumni candidates sent to the regents for review in early September, but both were named to the committee Sept.

The committee plans to begin screening applicants Dec. 1 and is required to present a list of no less than three and no more than five candidates to the regents on or before April 1. The regents will make the final selection.

The search became necessary after President Duane Acker announced he will resign as president effective June 30, 1986. He began his 11th year as president in July.

Alumni representatives on the committee are President of KSU Alumni Association Elizabeth Oswald of Hutchinson, Chandler, Galle, Johnson, Lowman and Ray.

Student committee members are Tamara Barham, junior in social sciences; Jill Hummels, graduate in journalism and mass communications; and Brown.

Faculty representatives are David Schafer, Faculty Senate presidentelect and professor of animal sciences and industry; Committee Chairperson Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology and former Faculty Senate president; and Reagan.

The remaining members are Randolph Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration; Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents; and Koeppe. Koplik and Koeppe are non-voting members.

"The students know they must act responsibly toward drinking in the halls and so far no extensive problems have been encountered," Proite said. "We have very responsible students. This would not happen on

Heart recipient suffers slow speech

By The Associated Press

HERSHEY, Pa. - A man being kept alive by the first Penn State artificial heart suffered a 30-minute period of slow speech Sunday but doctors have not determined whether it was a stroke, a hospital spokesman said.

Doctors early Sunday had reported Anthony Mandia was improving after receiving the mechanical heart Friday, but at a noon news conference a spokesman for Hershey Medical Center, Carl Andrews, said that Mandia had about a half-hour of slow speech.

Andrews said he didn't know exactly when the episode occurred. Doctors, including a neurologist who examined Mandia, "have not determined that this was a stroke at all. He had a previous brain indury from an injury that he sustained as a youth," Andrews said.

"They're not sure whether this was a result of that, the stress of the operation, a change in his bloodsugar level or any number of things."

Andrews said Mandia has been placed at the top of a list to receive a human heart transplant, but that was not because of the slowed speech.

"As soon as a donor heart is available the transplant can be done," Andrews said.

Mandia, 44, received the 1-pound, plastic, air-driven device Friday, soon after doctors determined his own heart wouldn't last much longer.

Doctors said the artificial heart, developed at Hershey Medical sity, would stay in Mandia as a stopgap measure until a compatible human donor heart could be found. They had originally estimated that could take a week or two.

Center, an arm of Penn State Univer-

Andrews had said earlier in the morning that Mandia had had a liquid breakfast food and wanted to get out of bed and walk around. "No, not yet," Andrews quoted the doctors as telling the Philadelphia bachelor. "They did allow him to dangle his feet over the bed."

Mandia, who until March had worked for the Philadelphia recreation department, was taken to Hershey last Monday suffering from "severe end-stage" coronary disease. His condition deteriorated before the artificial heart was implanted.

leader Mikhail Gorbachev. Like other major papers, La Repubblica predicted that Craxi was virtually assured of being selected by Cossiga, and noted that the Socialist "has excellent possibilities of succeeding" in forming a government.

Leaders of all five parties in Craxi's coalition said they believe another five-party government is the best solution to the crisis, and some have said they would like to see Craxi again at the helm.

Besides Craxi's Socialists, the other coalition parties are the Christian Democrats, Italy's largest party; the Republicans; Liberals and Social Democrats.

Craxi refused to let the Communists, the nation's second-largest party, into his government.

The coalition fell apart when Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini pulled his Republicans from the coalition.

Spadolini said he was protesting Craxi's decision to release Mohammed Abbas, a Palestine Liberation Organization official accused by the United States of masterminding the hijacking, during which an American passenger was killed.

Spadolini said he saw no alternative to another five-party coalition. But he insisted that the new government issue a clear position on the fight against terrorism and on foreign policy, especially in the Mediterranean and the Middle East.

If the premier-designate fails in putting together a government, Cossiga could dissolve Parliament and call early elections, which normally would be due in 1988.

Ward cuts mail sales by catalog

By SUSAN L. DAWSON Staff Writer

By December 1986, a 113-year-old tradition will come to an end - there will no longer be a Montgomery Ward catalog.

A flyer in the 1985 Christmas edition, the last major catalog the company will print, states the corporation is embarking on a new path - "a direction that will build Montgomery Ward into a chain of value-driven specialty stores."

Charles Thorne, media relations manager for the Chicago-based company, said the catalog business is being shut down because it has become unprofitable for the company.

The catalog operation as a whole has been losing an average of $50 million a year for several years," he said. The loss has prompted the company to place an emphasis on retail,

Thorne said the rapidly escalating production and distribution costs were additional factors in the clos-

The company, along with its catalog sales operation, was founded in 1872 by Aaron Montgomery Ward in Chicago. He is also given credit for publishing the first general merchandise, mail-order catalog.

Thorne said the decision to close all catalog operations by December 1986 was made in late July. At the same time, upper-management decided to concentrate resources on enhancing its new "specialty store" image, while attempting to keep their prices at a "modest" level.

Currently, there are approximately 360 Montgomery Ward retail stores in the United States, in addition to approximately 50 companyoperated and 1,200 individually owned catalog outlets. Thorne said catalog outlet stores are instructed

Nicaragua's Ortega says United States ruled by terrorists

By The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS Nicaragua's President Daniel Ortega Monday accused the United States of "state terrorism" and said the state of emergency in his country will be suspended once the United States stops its "agressions."

'Nicaragua shall never kneel before the policy of state terrorism being practiced by U.S. rulers," the 39-year-old leader said during a speech before the U.N. General Assembly.

He challenged President Reagan, who speaks at the United Nations Thursday, to use the occasion to announce that the United States will cease "its policy of aggression against Nicaragua.

'We on our part will suspend the state of emergency we have been forced to impose due to the agressions, as of the very moment when the agressions effectively cease," he said. Civil rights have been suspended under Nicaragua's state of emergency.

Ortega is one of several world leaders participating in this week's celebration of the United Nations' 40th anniversary.

A U.N. spokesperson said Ortega asked U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to arrange a meeting with Reagan.

Spokesperson Mario Samorano said he made the request in a talk with the Perez de Cuellar shortly before the speech, and the secretarygeneral would pass the request to U.S. Ambassador Vernon Walters.

In Washington, D.C., State Department spokesperson Bernard Kalb reacted to Ortega's remarks by reaffirming the U.S. view that the state or emergency "reflects the Sandinistas' fear of their own people."

described as a "further step toward imposing a totalitarian regime," the Marxist Sandinista government last week imposed new restrictions on the freedom of speech, travel and assembly, the right to strike and on privacy in the home and the mails. During an hourlong interview with a small group of reporters Sunday. Ortega said last week's internal crackdown was needed to guarantee final victory over the resistance forces, known as Contras.

...we are concerned with the defense of this organization which, on its 40th anniversary, is being seriously threatened by those who, disregarding respect for the people's self-determination and sovereignty, presently threaten to destroy Nicaragua.'

- Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega

He listed details of what he said were the U.S. efforts to "destroy Nicaragua's democratic process and deny the existence of a non-aligned Nicargua.

Ortega said in his speech he was bringing the matter to the General Assembly "because we are concerned with the defense of this organization which, on its 40th anniversary, is being seriously threatened by those who, disregarding respect for the people's self-determination and sovereignty, presently threaten to destroy Nicaragua?

Attempting to minimize the impact of the restrictions, Ortega said the Constituent Assembly will continue to write a new constitution, taking in-In what the Reagan administration to account opposing viewpoints.

Acker reviews regents' actions for University

By JERI HEIDRICK Campus Editor

In a Monday press conference, President Duane Acker heralded Thursday and Friday's Board of Regents' meetings as being beneficial for the University.

The regents' decisions cited by Acker as beneficial to the University included approval of an additional $422,000 for funding in fiscal year 1988 to complete renovation of Weber

The expected construction cost for Weber Hall renovation is $6.5 million but the lowest base bid was $6.09 million, said Vince Cool, assistant professor in facilities architectural

"The dollars available would cover the base bid but they would not cover the alternates for fixed, immovable

After fielding questions, Acker said the regent's approval of the College of Home Economics name change to the College of Human Ecology was a step in the right direction. He said consideration of a name change has occurred over a long period of time.

Farid Afani, a friend and former student of Husseini, now the manager of Consulting Architectural's Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, branch, visited Husseini in June and asked him to design Prince Saud's palace compound. Husseini accepted.

"My contact (with the prince) is through the firm," Husseini said. "The firm actually meets with the prince and sends me all the information. I get feedback from my friend (Afani).

After three months of work in the summer, Husseini sent his preliminary work for presentation to Prince Saud. The feedback from Afani was positive - just a few minor changes. The palace's facade - its marble face - needed more ornamentation.

"When they met with the client, he said he liked a very traditional Moorish style, similar to (architecture in) Al Hambra, Spain," Husseini said. "So when I started working with the facade, I started with making it very simple because the Moors did it that way, with very rich ornamentation on the inside."

The prince's changes introduced his personal style into the design, Husseini said. The inside of the buildings, however, still will reflect Husseini's more traditional efforts.

Husseini, native of Syria, said he was interested in designing the prince's $7-million compound not only because it was a prestigious commission, but because it demanded the traditional Mideast architecture he had described in his

The thesis compared the traditional architecture of the region with the modern styles invading the Middle East.

"Climate-wise and social-wise, it (traditional architecture) works better," he said. "If you're thinking about climate, thick walls and arcades and courtyards are better, and also because it evolved through the years to fit and express the culture. You can't transport culture.'

Designing the seven buildings for Prince Saud in the Moorish style that first appeared with the Arab invasion of Spain in the early Middle Ages was a special challenge.

The palace's central room is framed above by a gallery looking down from the second floor, and clerestory windows throw light onto the fountain below, Husseini said. A dining room, an area for entertaining and a hallway leading to the family quarters open into the main

The rest of the compound will be similar to the central room of the palace, Husseini said, with large amounts of open space, courtyards and fountains.

Botha threatens chrome embargo

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Black mobs, divided on how to confront apartheid, fought each other in Soweto with spears, rocks, hatchets, fire bombs and handguns on Monday. Elsewhere in South Africa, 16 opponents of white rule went on trial on charges of treason.

In another development, President P.W. Botha reacted angrily to the limited economic sanctions imposed by the United States last month and by the Commonwealth of Britain and 48 former British colonies Sunday night.

He said his government could put a million Americans out of work by withholding chrome exports to the United States. An embargo on chrome exports to unfriendly nations also could bring Western Europe's auto industry to a standstill, he said. South Africa is the West's major supplier of chrome and some other strategic metals. Botha made the statements at a political rally in Bethlehem, 130 miles south of Johannesburg. He also repeated his rejection of the one man-one vote system for South Africa.

Craxi to help solve political crisis

ROME - Bettino Craxi was asked to form a new government Monday, four days after he resigned as prime minister. Politicians expect him to try to resurrect the same coalition that fell apart over the Achille Lauro hijacking.

"I will immediately start work to resolve the political crisis, which does not lend itself to easy solutions," Craxi told reporters after President Francesco Cossiga named him premier-designate.

Politicians said Craxi would try to form a government with the same four parties that joined his Socialists in the former coalition the Christian Democrats, Republicans, Social Democrats and Liberals.

Nuclear waste may travel on I-70

KANSAS CITY, Mo - More than 300 shipments of spent nuclear fuel could travel through Kansas City each year by the year 2000, based on plans being drawn up by the Department of Energy.

The department estimates that 136 truck shipments a year would travel through Missouri, primarily on Interstate 70, said Lake Barrett, a department official, at a Kansas City public hearing Monday.

Department officials also estimate that 183 shipments a year would pass through Kansas City on rail lines.

Court allows billboard restrictions

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court Monday allowed Kansas officials to continue enforcing restrictions on highway billboards.

The court, citing the lack of a "substantial federal question," rejected arguments that the state's regulations unconstitutionally limit free speech.

Roberts Enterprises Inc., which owned some 150 billboards throughout Kansas, balked at orders by the state transportation department to remove the signs.

A state judge ruled in favor of the company, but the ruling was overturned by the Kansas Supreme Court last May.

The state's highest court said a 1972 state law barring billboards within 660 feet of highways is constitutional.

The law only regulates commercial expression and "does not reflect an intent to include the dissemination of political, societal, religious or doctrinal ideas," the state court said.

Reagan plans arms sales to Jordan

WASHINGTON - President Reagan on Monday formally proposed selling $1.9 billion in aircraft and other sophisticated arms to Jordan, igniting a fight with Congress that administration supporters conceded won't be won without major concessions.

Even as Pentagon officials issued the formal arms sale notification to Congress, Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was exploring the possibility of drafting legislation that would make the transaction contingent on progress toward peace in the Middle East.

The Pentagon, in releasing the formal notification, said it was asking Congress to approve the sale of 40 advanced jet fighters and 300 air-to-air missiles at an estimated cost of $1.1 billion.

Also proposed was the sale of Improved HAWK air-defense missile batteries and shoulder-fired Stinger missiles for roughly $710 million, plus 32 Bradley M3 calvary fighting vehicles for an estimated $75

Participants at the two-day conference over the weekend included former Interior Secretary Stewart Udall and Rep. George Miller,

While the participants disagreed on most issues, an "openmindedness led to a kind of harmony that accompanied the group,"

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. - Prince Charles and Princess Diana are expected in Palm Beach next month for a polo match and a formal fund-raising ball, but some residents are upset that industrialist Armand Hammer is sponsoring the gala event.

UNITED NATIONS - Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres offered Monday to go to Jordan this year to participate in a Middle East peace conference.

"I hereby proclaim: The state of war between Israel and Jordan should be terminated immediately," Peres said. "Israel declares this readily in the hope that (Jordan's) King Hussein is willing to reciprocate this step.'

He made the offer in a speech before the U.N. General Assembly during celebrations of the United Nations' 40th anniversary. The statement recalled the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's 1977 offer to go to Jerusalem - a journey that paved the way to an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty. Peres called on the Palestinian people to "put an end to rejectionism and belligerency.

"Let us talk," he said. "Come forth and recognize the reality of the state of Israel - our wish to live in peace and our need for security. Let us face each other as free men and women, across the negotiating table.

However, the prime minister ruled out participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization, saying the negotiators must "represent peace, not terror." Israel contends that the PLO is a terrorist organization.

Peres specified that, even if peace talks take place within an international framework, talks between Israel and a Jordanian delegation or combined Jordanian-Palestinian delegation must be "conducted directly." The same holds for any peace talks with Israel's other Arab foes, he said.

As Peres began to speak, many delegates from Arab and communist countries walked out of the hall. Such walkouts occur each time an Israeli addresses the General Assembly. Egypt's delegates did not take part in the Grubb, who is currently working on his doctorate, said he resigned as senator because of time conflicts.

"I'm working on my Ph.D. right now." Grubb said. "I'm busy with that and I just don't have the time to devote to Student Senate. I consider the academic side more important." ment and student senate chairman, said he was sorry to see Grubb resign.

Some women ventured into other areas, but many entered the College of Home Economics.

Women now come to the University for various reasons with no limitations on curriculum. The nation has moved away from the term home economics and its stereotypical meanings, and the University has followed the trend.

Series spotlights Midwest

For a few days in October, the eyes of the nation will focus on the Midwest.

It has been 41 years since two teams from the Midwest, the St. Louis Cardinals and the old St. Louis Browns met in the World Series of Major League Baseball.

This year, the Cardinals and the Kansas City Royals are opponents in the 1985 fall classic, which began Saturday night at Royals Stadium in Kansas City, Mo.

The Series has been called the I-70 Series, the Show-me Series and the Battle of Missouri. Most people are used to seeing socalled "prestige" teams like the New York Yankees and Los Angeles Dodgers in the series.

These people, however, will just have to wait until next year to have a chance to see those cities in the series. This year, the spotlight belongs to Kansas City and St. Louis.

Kansas City and St. Louis are both great cities, but neither gets the attention of New York, Chicago or Los Angeles. Both cities have much to offer that people on the coasts do not know about.

And maybe it's about time to draw some attention to the Midwest. Many of us in the Midwest are proud of our region and have been waiting for a chance to show it off. An event with national awareness and media coverage of the World Series presents just that type of opportunity.

While a winner in the World Series has not been determined, one winner has already emerged - the Midwest.

It's about time people took a closer look at one of the greatest, most livable areas in the United States.

Go Midwest!

Deficit legislation unwise

attractive seat on the balancedbudget bandwagon, Congress has done away with two traditions committee hearings and "expert" witnesses.

In an act of irresponsible posturing, Congressmen Phil Gramm, R-Texas and Warren Rudman, R-N.H., drafted a bill that will prohibit the federal budget from exceeding a predetermined deficit ceiling. It begins with a limit of $180 billion for 1986, and calls for reductions of approximately $36 billion each year, until the ceiling reaches a zero deficit by 1991.

In a rare move, Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., attached the proposal to the debtceiling bill and called for the vote without any committee hearings or expert testimony.

In defense of the rapid-passage tactics, Dole said it "is not a requirement here to know everything about a piece of

In their posturing for the most legislation. In fact it is not a requirement to know anything about it."

> Another strange aspect is Congress's willingness to give up its authority to the president.

If the Gramm-Rudman bill passes, the president will have the authority to order cuts in a proposed budget if the original proposal exceeds the legislated deficit ceiling.

Although not unexpected, another factor allowing the measure to pass 75-24 is the paranoia legislators have to being linked to a vote against any action against deficit reduction, regardless of the bill's content.

It is pure deriliction of duty for Congress to sidestep its responsibility as required by the Constitution's requirement that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Weddings, fishing — there's no difference

I was going through my hometown paper the other day, and a picture of a friend and his bride caught my eye.

I began reading the rather tedious article about the wedding and was comprehending everything just fine — until I came across the description of what the bride was wear-

"The gown was fashioned with a V-neckline edged with scalloped lace reembroidered with seed pearls as were the hemline and the chapel-length train. Her double-tiered chapel-length veil of tulle was held in place by a wreath of silk roses and stephanotis and she carried a bouquet of matching roses, stephanotis with baby's

I don't think I've ever been so overcome by a description of a piece of clothing in my life. The first question that popped into my head was whether the bride actually wore her dress down the aisle or the dress got up and walked by itself.

The next thing that bothered me was the words "baby's breath." I quickly looked at the other write-ups of the weddings and shockingly found that each couple had baby's breath in their weddings. What's worse, three of the brides were putting it in their Obviously I was missing out on an integral part of the wedding custom.

At first I tried to reason with myself and come up with a description of what baby's breath looked like. My thoughts immediately jumped to my 16-month-old nephew Jared. I thought of Jared inhaling and exhaling, and this led me to think of the little puffs of air he would blow on my cheek.

I immediately concluded that baby's breath must be something delicate, somewhat moist, ticklish and come in a variety of odors. This is all very fine, but it still doesn't justify sticking it in somebody's "Look honey, it's moist and delicate. Let's put it in your hair for our wedding."

"But dear, it's growing in the bottom of the Giving up on the term, I focused my attention on the "scalloped lace re-embroidered with seed pearls." Is the bride a walking garden, or is she trying to appear as natural as possible, or what? Don't ask me how she got the scalloped potatoes on her lace or why she re-embroidered the seed pearls - isn't one embroidery enough?

Finally I looked at the word stephanotis and vaguely recalled a similar term from biology class - staphylococcus, which is a form of bacteria - but obviously there isn't any room for bacteria on that dress.

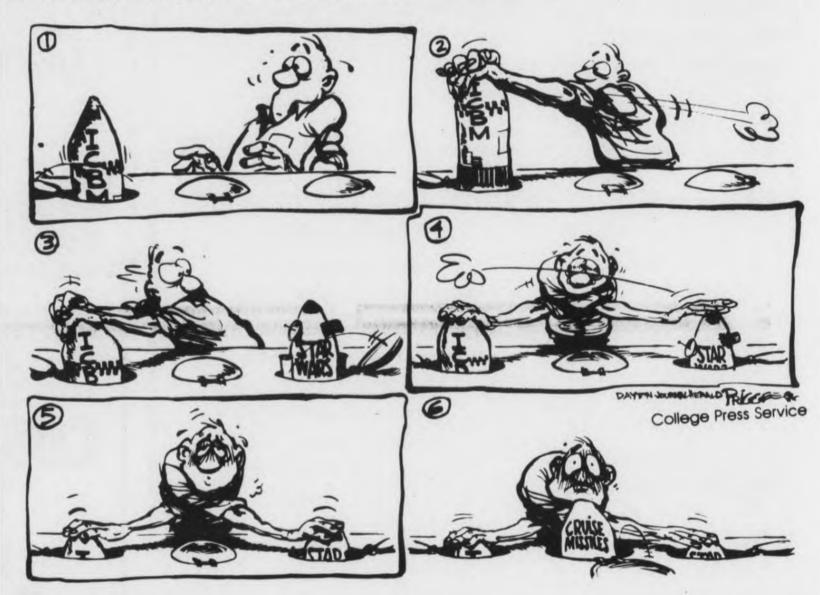

Totally confused, I put down the paper and talked myself out of taking any action that might be strenuous. I couldn't get rid of the thought, however, that all my friend and his bride were doing was getting married. Why the elaborate detail?

I began thinking of all the different fishing trips I have taken. When I get back from these trips and a friend asks me how the trip went, I usually reply with something like, "We only caught a couple small ones, but I had a great time trying to keep from falling out of the boat."

It would ruin the whole reply if I instead answered, "Well, I caught a 10-inch largemouth bass on my 4-pound, monofilament, flourescent line rigged with a twoinch, 3-ounce, shallow diving crankbait. I pulled the fish in with my magnetic spoolcontrolled, quick-release spincasting reel with self-adjusting drag, a 3:5:1 gear ratio and anti-reverse. This was fastened on to my six-foot, graphite, medium-action, two-piece spinning rod. I put the fish in my 38-gallon aerated livewell of my fiberglass, 12-foot bass boat complete with two side-by-side vinvl folding fishing chairs and powered by a 35-horse power, electric-start outboard 6-gallon motor."

Now I understand all these terms, but I still wouldn't bore somebody with all the needless details on a wimpy 10-inch bass. It takes something away from the sport of outsmarting a hungry fish. Getting married, going fishing, what's the difference anyway? Both can be enjoyable and memorable without elaborating on the various details of their intricate parts. This isn't to say one doesn't have definite advantages over the other, but that's another mat-

United States nearing 'coldness, emptiness of night'

Last fall, as I remember, we were deluged in a patriotic media campaign which told us "it's morning in America," and we, the youth, swallowed it like a spring calf laps up its mama's milk.

After much reflection and observation, I must conclude that despite Ron's wishes, it's not morning in America. It's twilight and night is fast approaching. This country today is the epoch of mediocrity, a spoiled child with an insatiable lust for hedonistic fulfillment. Yes, the United States is the most advanced, prosperous and opportunistic nation in history, yet we are doomed to the scrap heap as Egypt, Rome and Babylon before us.

No longer do we pursue life, liberty and happiness for all. We pursue it for ourselves. Happiness today is the quest for the almighty dollar and a man is judged by his pocketbook, not by his character. We blindly seek fulfillment in money, when we should get it out of other human beings.

Everyone is quick to criticize the government, but only half the voters who could change it exercise their right to vote. The technology and resources of this once-great land could revolutionize the world but we would rather use it to find a better way to "get off." I'm made more disgusted the more I think about this unforgivable waste of a generation.

I certainly hold no claim as a perfect individual. In fact, I'm probably more guilty than most in my past actions. Still, I'm thinking about change and what it would be like to live in a nation that seeks a meaningful course for its future. I know that deep down in our hearts the American people have an abundant compassion for their fellow man.

However, when I hear Ethiopian jokes and constant complaining I have to wonder. Night is indeed upon the horizon and its coldness and emptiness is something the world has never experiened before.

John Wesley once said, "Give me five good men and I'll change the world." I am certainly not optimistic that things will change, but I'm ready to try. The world needs the "Revolution of Soul," and it needs it now! People of love come together and warm the hearts of the indifferent, before the night is ushered in!

Letters laughable

Re: Shelly Dicken's article, "Godly instruction focus of crop course," in the Sept. 26 Collegian:

It has been with great amusement that I have read the resulting letters regarding Stanley Ehler, associate professor of agronomy, and his "degrading" remarks about women and their motives for attending a university.

These letters have stated emphatically that Ehler has overstepped his boundaries as a teacher and has infringed on our rights as women by calling us liars and husband

These letters are laughable! My advice to those women who are offended by Ehler's comments is to search deep within themselves and discover what their own, TRUE motives for attending college are. Perhaps what Ehler has said struck a little too close for comfort. In any case, a woman who is secure within herself and her reasons for living her life the way she does, need not fear any remarks

The authors of the petition have very limited factual knowledge of what is involved in something like the strategic defense initiative. We all have very limited knowledge of such matters. The unknown can lead to the knee-jerk reaction known as fear. Once possessed by fear, all bets are off. One then resorts to emotions.

Emotional appeals usually have very little real content. They are nice while they last, but they don't last very long. And why is that? Such appeals don't have any

Restaurant Management Club members Tammy Geise, sophomore in restaurant management, Kathy Phillips, senior in restaurant management and Brian Boldt, freshman in restaurant management, discuss operation of

The Tomte cafe. The club ran the cafe as a fund raiser at Svensk Hyllningsfest last weekend in Lindsborg. More than 800 people were served.

Laura Holk, Lindsborg High School student and daughter of the owner, runs the cash register as customers enjoy their meals in the Swedish atmosphere.

Stomers enjoy their means at the owners and the owners are the story to the story t

Restaurant Management Club president Boyd Holk, junior in restaurant management, dishes up a serving of Swedish meatballs.

The people of Lindsborg experienced a takeover this weekend during the bienial Svensk Hyllningsfest.

Musical entertainment was provided by men with bagpipes instead of car stereos. People ate Swedish meatballs instead of hamburgers, and The Tomte resembled a fast-food restaurant rather than the homey, laid back cafe it usually is.

The bagpipe players and Swedish meatballs probably weren't so unusual in Kansas' "Little Sweden," but the regular customers who expected to see local reataurant owner Gisela Holk behind the counter at her establishment, The Tomte, were in for a surprise. Gisela had been replaced by a T-shirted tribe of K-Staters — the KSU Restaurant Management Club.

Charlie Partlow, club advisor and director of the restaurant management program in the department of dietetics, restaurant management and institutional management, said the idea behind the takeover was twofold. Running the restaurant would provide a good money making project for the club and it would give the students a unique opportunity to become entrepreneurs.

The club was able to execute this peaceful takeover because two of Gisela's children, Boyd and Christine, are in the restaurant management club. The original plan was for the club to help Gisela from 6 a.m. until 2 p.m., cutting her operating costs. From 2 to 8 p.m., the club would work in the restaurant by themselves, cooking and serving food from a menu they had devised, Partlow said. Gisela agreed to let the club keep any profit

However the game plan was changed. Gisela was working from her menu, the club was taking orders from their menu and consequently, the customers took too long to decide what they wanted to eat. The club pooled their food resources with Gisela's, one menu was used and the profits were split 50/50.

"We (some of the club members) thought we were going to be waitresses," said Tammy Geise, sophomore in restaurant management, "but, it got so rushed. People were just taking and grabbing — it turned into a fast food restaurant. People were yelling 'hamburger,' 'cheeseburger' way back to the back (bitches)."

(kitchen)."
Christine Holk, sophomore in restaurant management, said the food orders didn't take much more than a minute because the club members in the kitchen cooked throughout the day. When the customers arrived, they picked up a tray, got their drinks, and placed their food order. The food was usually ready by the time they got to the cash

"By the time they paid their bill, they had their food," Christine said. "It was better than Wendy's." During the lunch hour, a line of hungry Menus were passed out to the people in line, and "Boyd went through the line and got the to-go orders. The food was ready before they got to the cash register. This way, no festival-goers stretched out the door and around the corner. Once again, an adjustment was made to compensate for the heavy one had to stand and wait for tables," Christine said.

Outside the restaurant, Geise and Kathy Phillips, senior in restaurant management, sold club-made sandwiches and Swedish rye bread to passers-by in an attempt to promote the club and drum up business for The Tomte. When they sold the last loaf, they distributed The Tomte menu among the crowds gathered on the street.

Their friendly advertising methods, the ed combined to make the club's weekend venture a success.

The club served between 800 and 1,000 people for the three-day period and made about $4,500, said Boyd Holk, junior in restaurant management. This total can be compared to the $600 to $900 Gisela usually makes for three days prior to deducting food costs. After food costs are deducted, the club should see an $800 to $1,000 profit, he said.

"We made a lot of educated and noneducated guesses. We didn't know what to serve, how much to serve, but I think we did very well," Boyd said.

Gisela said working at The Tomte provided the club with a nice, hands-on experience.

"Before they were learning from books," she said. "Now they know how it (the food) goes and where it goes."

Gisela R. Holk, owner of The Tomte, gets a neck rub from daughter and club member Christine Holk during a slow moment in the kitchen.

Series trip ends in search for food, drink, 'freebies'

What could be better than a press pass to the first game of the World Series?

Last Saturday, before I pulled into the parking lot of Royals Stadium, I asked myself that question again and again.

With press pass in hand, I entered Royals Stadium.

Bingo.

"This is going to be great," I immediately thought to myself.

First off, I found my seat in the auxilary press section of Royals Stadium, which was not in the actual press box as I had expected. The auxilary section was simply some seats near the top and in the middle of the lower level, with tables set up over the stadium chairs.

"This must be where they put all of the small-time, pseudo journalists," I figured.

It comforted me somewhat to see that representatives from the Boston Globe were seated directly below me. I didn't feel quite so insignificant then.

Of the almost 1,000 media members assigned to cover the game, the only people who rated actual press box seating were from ABC television, CBS radio, large national publications and media who covered the Royals and Cardinals throughout the year.

As it became obvious to me that probably nobody cared whether a representative of the Kansas State Collegian was in town to cover the World Series, I figured I might as well enjoy myself. In other words, I was looking for all the free stuff I could possibly get.

It was 6:30 p.m. — one hour before game time. As a member of the press at a sporting event, that means dinner time in the press lounge.

I was expecting a great free meal. This was the World Series after all.

What I got, as did all other members of the media, was a chicken box dinner. At least that's what they called it anyway. I can't complain about the price of the meal, to be sure. But for the World Series, you would think the Royals could come up with something better than two pieces of cold chicken, a roll and butter, a stick of celery and carrot, an apple and a coconut cookie for dessert. I was disappointed. I had better food in my high school

TOM PERRIN Staff Writer

The food in the press box at KSU Stadium is much better than what they serve at Royals Stadium. K-State may not have much of a football team, but they at least have good food in the press box.

After enjoying my "succulent" meal, I settled in to watch the game, a 3-1 Royals

Throughout the game, Royals publicity assistants were handing out media guides, programs and information sheets. This was nice.

I was also able to get more free food. Hot dogs, soft drinks and even beer was available to the media without charge.

While I didn't enjoy any of the free brewski, I wondered whether I could have nailed the Royals for serving beer to a minor if I had taken one.

After the game, in hopes of collecting more free stuff, I headed for the Royals locker room.

I didn't figure that George Brett would miss one of his No. 5 jersies. He can get all he wants. I thought it would probably mean more to me than it would to him anyway. He seems like a nice guy and probably wouldn't turn me in if he caught me stealing the jersey.

Much to my dismay, however, my pass didn't allow me entrance into the Royals clubhouse, according the policeman at the

Trying to rid myself of the disappointment of not getting to talk to Royals players, I headed up to the Stadium Club for the post game hors d'oeuvres with selected VIPs and other media people.

The food in the Stadium Club tasted pretty good. But then again, what wouldn't taste good after the chicken box

After I finished rubbing elbows with the elite in the Stadium Club, it was time to call it a night.

While the Wildcat football team was laying low in Lawrence last weekend, the K-State Aerial Wizards Frisbee® club was flying high at the 1985 Kansas Flying Disc Championships in Manhattan.

The Aerial Wizards took first place in the ultimate division, the most popular Frisbee® event. The Ultimate Gyrations club from Wichita finished second, and the Ultimate Till Ya Puke (UTP) club from Fayetteville, Ark., placed third. K-State Club members also did well in the individual

In the pro golf event Mike Boisvert, Topeka, placed first. Placing second, from Manhattan, was Brad Dreese. In a three-way tie for third was Mark Wizby, Manhattan; Kyle Burk, Junction City and Rich Smith, Lawrence.

In the amateur golf division taking first was Kirk Barrett, Manhattan. Michol Kranz, Manhattan, placed second. Finishing third was Randy Pulec, Wichita.

Taking first in the maximum time aloft event was Mark Styles, Kansas City, Mo.; second place went to Jay Jeter, Manhattan; Burk finished third.

Winning first-place in the distance event with a throw of 365 feet was Bob Haggert, Wichita. Narrowly missing Haggert's throw taking second-place was Styles with a throw of 363 feet. Smith threw the disc 353 feet for a third-place finish.

In the freestyle event Burk, Boisvert and Smith placed first. Taking second were Jeter and Suzanne Friesen, Manhattan. Thirdplace went to Styles and Wizby.

Even though the Aerial Wizards dominated the tournament, the overall champions were Boisvert, Styles and Smith.

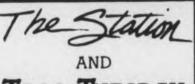

"Most people don't know it, but Manhattan has been a mecca for Frisbee® sports since 1976 - I'm just trying to keep the tradition going," said Burk, one of the tournament coordinators.

The sponsors for the tournament were Coors, WHAM-O, Last Chance and the Pathfinder. Coors donated hats and nylon discs. Discs, collectors discs, novelty discs and Frisbee® books were donated by WHAM-O. Last Chance donated discount coupons, and the Pathfinder donated footbags and one pair of Big Dog shorts.

"We didn't have as many competitors as we wanted for the tournament due to the weather and the traveling distance for the competitors," Jeter said.

This year's championship was a rematch of last year's game, which the TKEs won.

"We had four guys back from last year's team. This year it was our turn," Phi Wack quarterback Dave Keefer said. The TKEs scored first when Dallas

Board to recommend no change in zoning

By TOM SCHULTES Manhattan Editor

If the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board's sentiments are obeyed, Riley County will remain without zoning acceptable for recycling centers.

In a 4-1 vote Monday night, board members voted to send a recommendation to county commissioners to deny an amendment to zoning regulations in the county that would allow collection centers and storage of recyclable materials as a conditional use in light industrial districts.

Reasons cited in the action to not allow the change concerned the flammability of materials stored in recycling centers.

In action regarding the relocation of businesses for construction of the Manhattan Regional Shopping Mall, the board unanimously passed a rezoning for the Griffith Lumber Co.

'Some customers will change over to local stores," he said. "Some retail stores will pick up business, like K-Mart and Wal-Mart. That was the image Ward's was trying to create. There are people who are very dedicated, and they will have difficulty in changing allegiance from one store to another." Farias, assistant manager of the Manhattan Sears Roebuck and Co. store, 205 S. Fourth St., said his store, as well as others with a catalog business, will benefit from Ward's pullout from the catalog market.

"I don't feel it will have direct results in retail, but it will improve our catalog business," he said.

Farias said he couldn't estimate a dollar amount for increased sales, but predicted volume in his catalog department should increase.

and attract potential student recruits and researchers who will no longer see the stereotypical name of home economics. The change was approved unanimously by the Board of Regents at its meeting Friday. The Department of Pre-Design Professions within the College of Architecture and Design has also gained a new name, Environmental Design, as of Friday.

Department Head Richard Hoag said the Board of Regents approved the renaming Friday while the official renaming should take place Name change may alter school's image sometime in mid-November.

"We will have a (student) competition to design a logo and a sign for the college," Hoag said.

Environmental Design is a subordinate category for a number of degree-granting programs, Hoag said. The programs are for students in their first two years who may decide among regional and community planning, landscape architecture, interior architecture and architecture.

Hoag said the college decided on the name change to "present more clearly and reflect the interdisciplinary work."

Castle Crusade regroups to review proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum

By ERIC RHODENBAUGH Collegian Reporter

Castle Crusade is back.

"Castle Crusade started out as a band of students and faculty that didn't want to see Nichols razed," said Tony Rangel, vice president of Castle Crusade and senior in architecture.

Despite attempts by President Duane Acker in April 1979 to raise funding for the razing of the structure, $6.2 million was appropriated by the Kansas Legislature in 1981 for renovation.

In April 1979, more than 100 students "drove to Topeka one day and saw each and every legislative member to try to get funds for renovation," Rangel said. But after plans for the Nichols Hall renovation were complete, the group became somewhat inactive.

Last year several members of the group criticized proposals to build a parking lot east of McCain Auditorium and a circle drive that would service McCain and Nichols theater patrons. Neither project was carried

But Castle Crusade has been truly awakened by the problems surrounding the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum.

Construction on the coliseum will be delayed at least until February because bids for the project came in more than $3 million above the architect's and University's estimates.

To bring the project within budget, the Wichita architecture firm of Gossen Livingston Associates is presently redesigning the $16 million project to cut seating to approximately 12,500. The Board of Regents reserves the right to halt the project at any time before a construction contract is signed. "We are not against a coliseum," Rangel said. "We are for proper planning, and in the case of the coliseum, proper planning was not done, proper procedures were not follow-

Rangel said the group wants a coliseum, but professionally done studies are necessary to answer the many questions such as how large a facility is needed, will traffic be a problem, and how long before it will make money - involved in such a major

"I'd estimate the cost of the studies to be about $10,000 to $20,000. That's a small fraction of the millions of dollars available for the coliseum. It would be like an insurance policy for a car," Rangel said.

Weinberger claims Soviets violating arms agreement

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger charged Tuesday the Soviet Union has begun deploying a new mobile nuclear missile in violation of the SALT II accord and said this provided fresh justification for President Reagan's "Star Wars" program.

Weinberger confirmed the deployment of the new SS-25 missile in the course of attacking administration critics who believe "that arms control is a more ethically justifiable course of action than attempting to strengthen deterrence through defensive weapons.

'Today, I can officially confirm that one of their new ICBMs, the mobile SS-25, is now being deployed and is an unquestionable violation of Soviet assurances given to us under the SALT II accord," Weinberger told a conference sponsored by the Ethics and Public Policy Center, a conservative Washington, D.C., think-

"The SS-25 is road-mobile and can be housed in launcher garages equipped with sliding roofs. This makes it an extremely versatile weapon. The SS-25 violates the SALT II agreement that permits development of only new type of ICBM. Their first new type developed, the SS-X-24, is now being tested.

Given the failure of previous arms control agreements to force a reduction in nuclear weapons, "It is, I think, difficult

By The Collegian Staff

A Tuesday morning fire in an apartment house at 511 N. 14th St. caused an estimated $3,500 in property damage.

Workers using propane torches to strip paint from exterior wood siding ignited the space between the siding and interior walls, said Manhattan Fire Chief Bill Smith.

The building is owned by Brian and Audrey Winter. There are seven apartments in the three-floor structure, said Sylvester McGee, one of the workers.

"There wasn't really any fire, just smoke," McGee said

Stephanie Jennings, junior in interior design and resident of the damaged building, said she was preparing for class when someone pounded on her door. She said she wasn't too concerned about the fire, provided it didn't damage her television or projects.

"Those are the only two things I can't replace," she said.

Smith said the majority of the damage was to the siding and interior walls. He said there would be some smoke damage to the third floor contents, but little water damage.

Firefighters removed siding above and below the fire areas to ensure all hot spots had been eliminated and the fire would not begin again.

Brier emphasizes issues now confronting GOP

By MARGARET MAY Collegian Reporter

Emphasizing importance of state officials in political organization, Secretary of State Jack Brier addressed the issues considered important by the Reagan administration and the Republican party Tuesday night at a meeting of the College Republicans

In introducing Brier, Mike Aylward, senior in agronomy and chairman of College Republicans, stressed the importance of local action in building the structure of the party. Brier agreed.

"The national party recognizes the value of elected officials throughout the state," Brier said, "to carry a message and to build a coalition and to build a team.

In outlining his message, Brier talked about four basic areas he sees as defining the Republican administration

Republicans want to reduce the tax system from 14 levels to three, Brier

"The essence of the whole plan is in one word, and that is, it is fair," he

The Republican party is also in favor of free trade and fair trade, Brier said. If the United States puts quotas on imports, the move would eventually hurt agriculture and Kansas, he said.

Another priority of the party is a balanced budget, Brier said. It would like to see the elected representatives quit spending and if they don't quit spending, the president will make cuts, he said.

On the subject of national defense, the Republican party has set a fourpronged strategy, he said.

The Reagan administration wants to get the economy in shape; restore the sound foundation of defense; attempt to stabilize relations with the Soviet Union; and try to answer the question: "Is there a non-nuclear deterrent to war?'

"The answer, although it is only on paper, is the Strategic Defence Initiative," Brier said.

'What does all this have to do with you?" he said. "This president has a fair and simple program in terms of us being able to understand. It is fair and it is peaceful."

Jordan rejects Peres' negotiation plans

By The Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel - Prime Minister Shimon Peres said Tuesday he called for negotiations with Jordan because Israel must regain the initiative in the search for peace.

Peres' proposals, which came in speech to the United Nations on Monday, appeared to offer little new for the Arabs. The proposals were promptly rebuffed by Jordan and criticized at home by Israeli hawks.

The call for direct talks on ending the state of war and resolving the Palestinian problem came as Jordan was trying to improve relations with neighboring Syria, a hard-line state that has refused to talk peace until it achieves military parity with Israel.

A statement issued Monday, after Jordanian-Syrian talks in Riyadh under Saudi Arabian sponsorship, said Jordan rejected "all partial and unilateral settlements with Israel." A high-ranking official in Amman said this was King Hussein's response to the Peres speech.

Peres acknowledged there was only a "possibility" his peace feeler would be answered, but he cautioned against taking initial public reactions from Jordan and other Arab countries at face value. "I wouldn't judge very much the reactions by the public declarations," he told a meeting of Jewish leaders in New York.

There was no immediate reaction from key Arab moderates, such as Egypt, or from the Palestine Liberation Organization. The silence could indicate that Arab governments were awaiting more definitive statements from Jordan and the PLO, which agreed in February on a joint approach to Middle East peace.

PLO chairman Yasser Arafat told a news conference Monday in Kuwait, before the Peres speech, that he rejected earlier offers of negotiations with Jordan and selfrule for Palestinians in Israelioccupied Arab territories.

"I am sure no Palestinian party will dare to take part in any negotiations without PLO approval," Arafat said. He claimed Peres was trying to 'cover up his iron-fist policy" with peace proposals.

Country establishes nuclear policy

NASSAU, Bahamas - Prime Minister David Lange of New Zealand said Tuesday his country is willing to decide for itself whether visiting U.S. warships carry nuclear weapons, without asking the United States to declare it.

"I hope the U.S. considers this seriously," he said.

New Zealand's refusal to admit nuclear-armed warships to its ports, and U.S. refusal to say whether any ship carries such weapons, have soured relations and endangered the ANZUS defense alliance that also includes Australia.

Lange said the Reagan administration seemed to reject the idea without really considering it when Deputy Prime Minister Geoffrey Palmer visited Washington late last summer.

RAMSTEIN, West Germany — A U.S. fighter jet was reported lost at sea off the Turkish coast Tuesday and the fate of its pilot was unknown, an Air Force spokesman said.

The jet, an F-16 assigned to the 50th Tactical Fighter Wing and based in Ramstein, disappeared about 25 miles from the Incirlik Air Base in Turkey, according to Maj. Johnny Whitaker, a spokesman for the Ramstein base.

Whitaker said in a statement that the fighter jet was on a routine "weapons training deployment" to Turkey when it disappeared.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Rioting flared outside major cities Tuesday with up to eight blacks reported killed, and a white South African minister said he and five other churchmen want to talk with the African National Congress, the main guerrilla organization trying to overthrow the government.

President P.W. Botha warned that a meeting would "amount to a challenge of the state's authority."

Security police reportedly arrested a leader of the United Democratic Front, the main multiracial organization opposed to white-minority rule. WASHINGTON - Nearly 60 percent of the children's aspirin on store shelves in early October carried warning labels intended to protect youngsters from the often-fatal Reye syndrome, indicating a controversial voluntary labeling campaign is working, the head of the Food and Drug Association said Tuesday.

Dr. Frank Young, the FDA commissioner, said educational efforts by the agency and the aspirin industry intended to inform parents of the possible link between aspirin and the children's disease also appear to be working.

No retrial for 2 in mail fraud case

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - The government said Monday it will not retry two businessmen accused of defrauding the U.S. Postal Service out of nearly $500,000.

A three-week trial ended in a mistrial last week when a U.S. District Court jury could not reach verdicts in the mail fraud case of Clay Blair, former president of Fred Pryor Seminars in suburban Kansas City, and Jack Jennings, former president of the Human Producitivity Institute in San Francisco.

U.S. District Judge Earl O'Connor rescheduled their trial for next week, but Assistant U.S. Attorney Amanda Mears said Monday the charges will be dismissed.

"Our office feels the case could not be better tried. We couldn't justify the time and expense of another trial," she said.

Federal indictments returned in May alleged that the defendants and Fred Jandt, executive director of Human Productivity, and Steve Juedes, comptroller of Fred Pryor Seminars, schemed to mail millions of brochures promoting seminars presented by Fred Pryor Seminars at a bulk discount postal rate that had been granted to the San Francisco institute. Fred Pryor Seminars, which has changed its corporate name to Pryor Resources, Inc., is a for-profit company and not entitled to the postal discount.

The purchase of inadequate shelving has delayed the moving of about 200,000 library volumes from Farrell Library to Nichols Hall. Moving will begin Dec. 1, five months later than the original July 1

"A year ago December we became aware the shelving was here, but after going over (to Nichols), it became fairly obvious to us it was not what we expected," said John Johnson, government documents librarian at Farrell.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said industrial shelving consisting of two double-faced sides not independently adjustable was originally installed. Such shelving was inadequate for Farrell's needs because only materials of the same size could be stored on the same shelf, which wasted space.

The Nichols Hall Task Force expected standard library shelving, which is double-faced and adjustable (materials of various sizes can be stored on the same shelf), to be installed.

'The original shelving was very specialized and was designed for materials of the same size," Hobrock said. "We didn't feel as though we could accept it because maximum shelving capacity was needed. The University agreed, so it was replaced.

Hobrock said the University is now paying about $85,000 for the new shelving.

"Discussion is limited at the present time. We can say, however, that the University is attempting to recover damages at this point," said Vince Cool, assistant professor of University facilities architecture services

Hobrock said library volumes are being moved to Nichols because Farrell is within five years of reaching capacity at 80 percent.

"The University provided space for 200,000 volumes in Nichols, so we decided to move them all at once to make it easier on everyone," Hobrock said.

The Nichols Hall Task Force, comprised of 14 representatives from areas affected by the move, made the final decision concerning selection of items to be moved to Nichols. The selection process took about two years.

"It was a very difficult decision to know what to take over there," Hobrock said. "All of the records have to be changed, so we wanted to move the least used." Hobrock said location changes for all periodicals will be noted in the serials' lists, and monograph changes will be noted in the card catalog. All volumes moved to Nichols may be checked out through Farrell's circulation department by request only.

Tentative completion for the movement of all volumes has been set for mid-February, Hobrock

Peres takes step for peace

As part of the United Nations' 40th anniversary celebrations, Israeli Prime Minister Simon Peres took a bold step Monday by offering to participate in a Middle East peace conference.

Peres issued a counterchallenge to Jordan's King Hussein to negotiate an end to the violence in the Middle East - excluding the Palestine Liberation Organization. His statement, made before the U.N. General Assembly, echoes a 1977 offer by the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. As a result of that move, the Israelis and Egyptians came to an agreement of nonaggression.

Peres said the talks could deal with resolution of the "Palestinian problem" and with demarcation of boundaries. He extended this to other Arab nations as well. In a turnaround from previous statements, Peres agreed to meet in Jordan before the end of the year to facilitate occurrence of the talks.

While numerous entities could preclude the talks from actually taking place, Peres's announcement should be greeted with hope. The PLO-inclusion question could prevent successful talks, as could disparity in international support of the two sides of the conflict. For various reasons, the seemingly workable solution to the problem is international peace talks with equal represen-

If the talks actually take place. the U.S. slant should be toward impartiality, although that has not been the foreign policy viewpoint of this country for a number of years. The question at stake is not solely one of resolving boundary questions; it involves human rights violations and terrorism on both sides.

We as a nation have a responsibility to support not the Israelis or the Palestinians, but the concept of peace. For far too long this country has taken a partisan stand in a question with many

The 1977 Sadat-Menacham Begin peace talks have produced tangible results in a conflict that began after World War II. The Carter administration acted in a primarily non-partisan capacity at that time, and the results have been positive.

The United States should make every effort to encourage successful peace talks between the Palestinians and Israelis, and give up the partisan views demonstrated since the 1960s.

MCC provides diversity

With the precarious financial otherwise not available, as well state of Manhattan Christian College, its relationship to the University should be looked at in a different light.

Undoubtedly, one feature that attracts students to MCC is the availability of some 50 joint programs with K-State.

While the majority of MCC graduates enter ministerial programs of one form or another, the ability for them to study other courses broadens the MCC student's marketability in finding employment in the field of their choice.

Without the K-State programs in areas such as the sciences, MCC would be even harder pressed financially by having to provide their own faculty and facilities.

But it is not just a one-way street.

With the joint-studies program, K-State students are also given the opportunity to attend classes as open themselves to ideas the student may not be exposed to otherwise.

As MCC President Kenneth Cable has stated, the University has historically maintained good relations with MCC. But there are legal restrictions in providing the monetary aid needed by the col-

MCC doesn't need any more pledges of contributions. It already has $1 million in uncollected pledges now. The school needs money — a lot of it. In the short time of 45 days.

It is not an overstatement that MCC provides a unique service to education, with only one other educational sharing of programs in the nation comparable.

The loss of MCC would adversely affect not only the community, but also the state of Christian education nationally.

Stateroom studiers inconvenience eaters

You are in the Union trying to eat lunch. It's been a lousy day, you've got yet another class at 1:30, and you're convinced you'll starve to death if you don't eat in the next five minutes. On your tray is soup, fried chicken and a piece of coconut cream pie.

The Stateroom is crowded. You search desperately for a table. After two trips around the seating areas, you are still standing. So are about 10 other people. You notice a lot of students studying with their books and papers all over the tables. You think to yourself, "Hey, if those jerks weren't hogging all those tables, I could sit down and eat my soup which is now colder than ...

You are in the Union. It's lunchtime. You've got this test in Advanced Brain Surgery Techniques at 1:30. The Stateroom has soft chairs, good lighting and nice tables - the perfect place to study. Besides, you might get hungry, so you want to stay close to food. You start going over your notes and skimming the text.

There seem to be a lot of people walking by your table. You look up to see some guy standing a few feet away from you with this bowl of soup on his tray. You think to yourself, "If that jerk spills soup anywhere near these notes I'll

We have a problem. In fact, we've had this problem for years - people studying in the Stateroom over the lunch hour. There is a Union policy that prohibits studying in the Stateroom between 10:30 and 1:30. Very few people pay attention to this policy.

During extremely busy days when several people are having difficulty finding a seat.

ATHENA WONG Guest

food service personnel are forced to politely remind those studying of the policy of no studying during the noon hour. Some students understand and quietly gather their books and head for the Cats' Pause. Others are not as cooperative.

The fact is the Stateroom does about half of its daily business between the hours of 10:45 and 1:45. That translates to over 3,000 students, faculty and staff members going through the lines during the lunch break every day. Food service has opened up any unreserved private stateroom to help absorb the overflow of people. But some days, there are still hungry people unable to find a seat.

The policy of no studying between 10:30 and 1:30 is difficult to enforce. Besides, what about those people who are reading nontextbooks during lunch or doing Collegian crossword puzzles? What about the ones who lay their backpacks on the table to reserve it while they talk to a friend who is sitting on the other side of the room? And besides, isn't this a place of higher education? Aren't we supposed to be studying? Isn't that what we pay $625.50 a semester to do?

Yes. So it really comes down to a matter of common courtesy and general cooperation. Be aware of the sheer number of people going through the Stateroom during lunch. If you notice quite a few people wandering around in search of a table, please take your books and crossword puzzle to another area of the Union so that everyone has a chance to eat lunch before their next class.

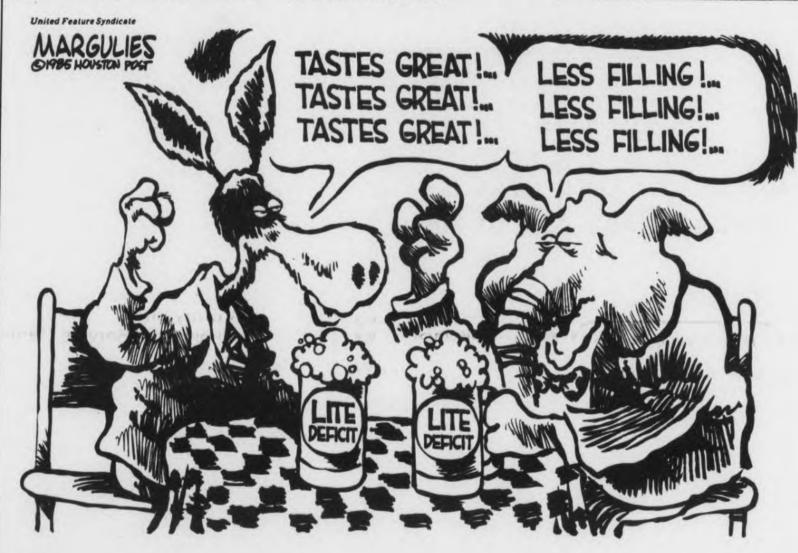

As far as studying goes, from 7 a.m. to 10:30 a.m. and from 1:30 p.m. until 9 p.m., students are welcome and encouraged to study in the Stateroom. Efforts are made by food service personnel to keep the lights on in certain areas of the Stateroom for studiers.

Remember, it's just that three-hour block when everyone is trying to eat lunch that studying and table-hogging in the Stateroom won't work. Please try to study in the Catskeller, Cats' Pause or the TV lounge during the noon rush.

Come into the Stateroom to relax and enjoy your lunch, but leave your books in your backpack. It'll make life easier for everyone.

Editor's note: Athena Wong is a senior in chemical engineering and chairperson of the Union Governing Board.

Olathe students create International Day of Peace

How many people are aware of what Nov. 7, 1985 is? Besides being the day President Reagan will meet with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, it is an International Day of Peace to the people of Olathe. The project all began thanks to Christopher Tatham, student council president and senior at Olathe

North High School (and my brother). Christopher sent a letter to each foreign embassy in the United States, requesting the personal mailing address of the country's head of state. While waiting for these addresses, he and the student bodies of both Olathe North and Olathe South High Schools collected more than 40,000 signatures. The students sent a letter and a signature sheet with 200 names to each leader asking them to contact another leader whom they usually do not contact, in order to discuss a non-political

On Wednesday, Oct. 9, a motorcade of more than 150 cars made its way through Olathe toward the city's post office to mail the letters. At 3:30 p.m., as the cue for the motorcade to begin, a local radio station played "We are the World." All of the cars were covered with posters, some designating countries' emblems and flags and others promoting world peace.

I, as well as the other 40,000 residents of Olathe, am very proud of this bright student's idea and hope that it will not only stimulate further citizen participation, but will also contribute to the ultimate achievement of world peace.

Attorney fails

On two occasions I have seen Students' Attorney Dianne Urban at the Union. Each time I have met with a decided unwillingness on her part to advise or represent me.

On one occasion, I saw her in reference to my getting attacked and beaten at Bushwacker's. I saw her recently about helping me with a problem I'm having with my landlady, who rented an apartment to me in what I found out later to be unlivable condi-

The whole place reeked of urine and my attempts to clean the place after moving in didn't help alleviate the smell. I now have to keep my clothes in a locker in Ahearn Field House to keep them from smelling like urine. The landlady apparently has no intention of correcting the situation and would prefer that I move out so she can rent the place to the next unsuspecting party, I suppose.

Why have a law representative for students if she makes no or very little attempt to direct one where they can get help in these matters? What makes apartment owners think they can treat respectable people in such unethical ways?

Signs abuse English language rules

Re: Catherine Sayler's column, "International students deserve toleration," in the Oct. 9 Collegian:

Pity the poor foreign students who learn their English from signs posted in Manhattan. I've been noting specimens of illogical, incorrect or just absurd posters on and off campus lately that no biligual dictionary could help to decipher. Here are a few examples.

The Bakery Science Club advertises that their Wednesday bake sale is on from "3:30 til supplies last.'

A computer science major might translate this into the following conditional loop for a sales manager: "If 3:30 then begin; do Sales until Supplies equals true." When supplies arrive, the sale must end.

An Aggieville laundromat leaves one hanging on an unnecessary apostrophe when they advertise: "Please leave your dog's outside." If "dog's" was intended as possessive, then the noun "outsides" is missing its "s." So where am I supposed to leave my dog's outsides? My dog's insides alone are permitted into this discriminating establishment.

One last example contains correct grammar, but the image of K-State coed lifestyles and the way the authorities at the women's locker room handle them, is (I hope) misleading. Outside the Natatorium doors a few weeks ago they announced, "I will be taking people out of lockers who haven't paid their rental fee.

> Donna Schenck-Hamlin Farrell librarian

Columnist should praise campus

Re: Rich Harris' column, "Takin' it to the streets with Rappin' Rich," in the Oct. 14

What a great idea for your "Rappin' Rich" column. I thought it served a purpose, but I'm not sure it was a good purpose. I agree with some of your rap, but why would the Collegian, one of the best ways to promote K-State and the campus, allow you to get away with "bagging" on K-State and the city of Manhattan?

I realize K-State may not be the best in everything, but we do have a lot of good things to offer people who decide to make K-State their "avenue" of self-enrichment and a better education.

I'm not upset with your idea, but I am upset with all your negative thoughts. Did you know that it takes 25 positive thoughts to erase one negative thought? If you spent half as much time promoting the good things about K-State as you do pointing out the bad things, maybe this would be a better place

I hope you understand that I'm not slamming on you personally, or asking you to give up your right to "freedom of the press." I'm just asking that you be more positive...especially on a Monday when it's so important to start the week off right! Hey, I happen to LOVE K-STATE!

Decision may increase club's payment

by COLLEEN WILSON Staff Writer

A decision by the Manhattan City Commission may increase compensation of one downtown business facing closure for the Manhattan Regional Shopping Mall

Doug Long, owner of Mel's Tavern and Bentley's club, requested a higher price for his businesses, in lieu of relocation benefits from the

Under the Federal Relocation Act of 1974, a business can't receive payment in lieu of relocation unless the owner can prove the business cannot relocate, the same owner has no other businesses in operation not affected by acquisition and the business is a minimum income business, said Community Development Coordinator Gary Stith.

Due to Long's ownership of another business, he may be deprived of payment in lieu of relocation.

Manhattan Mayor Suzanne Lindamood said there is a question as to whether the two downtown businesses are in the same corporation as Long's other business, The Doug Out, in the Old Town Mall at Yuma Street and Fort Riley Boulevard.

"The clientele and location are different. I think we have a federal obligation to be fair," Lindamood said. "If the federal law is unfair then the city will have to take it on to Stith said he would discuss the problem with the Department of Housing and Urban Development, which is providing $9 million in acquisition and site preparation funds through Urban Development Action Grants.

In other action, the commission passed a resolution calling for the acquisition of eight properties by eminent domain for the Downtown Redevelopment Project. Two ordinance readings are required before eminent domain is exercised.

Among properties affected are those in the Humboldt Square Shopping Center, Third and Humboldt streets, owned by Jim Morris, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, and Arlo Biere, professor of agricultural

Art gallery displays botanical engravings

By The Collegian Staff

Botanical prints made from original drawings from Captain Cook's first voyage around the world - from 1768 to 1771 - are currently on exhibition in the Union Art Gallery.

Artist Sidney Parkinson, who died of malaria near the end of the voyage, is credited with the original drawings.

Before his death, Parkinson finished 269 of nearly 950 draw-

Through notes and specimens, five English artists completed the work and 18 engravers worked for 13 years making the copper plates.

For various reasons, including economic chaos created by the Napoleonic Wars and the American War of Independence, the prints were not published as British Museum.

In 1980 a fine-arts printing firm in London was commissioned to finish the task. The plates are expected to be completed in 1988 and will total 738 in each of 110 limited edition sets

Botanical engravings displayed in the gallery represent plants found in islands, bays and rivers in Australia

The expedition also stopped at Brazil, New Zealand and Java, allowing the party to collect 3,607 plants, 1,400 of which were then new to science.

The prints are from the collection of Rural Route Tours International of Kansas City and were obtained by Union Program Council Arts Committee.

The exhibition runs through Nov. 8 and open for public viewing during gallery hours.

Author chronicles life of incest, abuse

By LINDA SCHMIDT

Arts and Entertainment Editor

Overcoming the haunting memories of a childhood beset with repeated instances of insest and rape is a decision Katherine Brady made after 10 years of abuse by her father.

After each incident she would say to herself, "just this once and it will be over," Brady said Tuesday. But it wasn't over. Two to three times a week her father would sexually abuse her.

"I couldn't seem to confront him," she said. "I would punish myself, not eat sweets or something. I became the total victim and I hated it."

"It makes it real, it gets you through it. I thought I was the only one who had this experience. I thought it was my fault," Brady told an audience of 300 in Forum Hall as part of the Issues and Ideas Lecture

When responding to statements made by victims of abuse, Brady tells them two things she wished most, but had to wait years to learn: You are not alone and you are not to

A victim is defined as someone that is emotionally abused, battered, neglected or sexually abused, Brady said. And incest could be accurately defined as any forcible act by a relative, blood relative or anyone that acts as a relative.

While conducting research on abuse, Brady studied different types of victimization and used volunteers in scenarios. One depicted a man hassling a woman in public. One onlooker grabbed the man and pulled him away from the woman, but another on-looker grabbed the woman and pulled her away.

After each incident Brady interviewed the people involved, asking them why they did what they did and how they felt about the situation. That type of research "shows us a lot about our behavior, the symbolic awful acts that tell us a lot about our

MCC joint-degree programs aid students in career choices

By MARY ROEHL Collegian Reporter

One factor in Manhattan Christian College's ability to draw students from across the nation is the fact it offers a jointdegree program with K-State, one of only two like it in the United States.

'We have over 50 joint-degree programs where students can get degrees from both schools," said David Smale, director of public affairs for MCC. Both schools offer reciprocal courses.

MCC students have been taking advantage of the joint-degree program since 1968, said Dennis Glenn, coordinator of the joint-degree

He said that of the school's full-time student enrollment of approximately 192 last spring, the school also provided, as rated by credit hours, the equivalent of 96 full-time students to K-State.

Throughout the past few years, the school has experienced a decline in enrollment, from a peak of 271 in 1981 to the current low of about 180. Fall semester enrollment figures for past years include 247 for 1980, 271 for 1981, 242 for 1982, 228 for 1983 and 191 for 1984. MCC President Kenneth Cable said the school could handle another 100 students without any expansion of facilities.

MCC offers joint-degrees in more than 30 programs, fully developed with a semesterby-semester program of study, Glenn said. Others are also available, but are not yet semester-by-semester programs.

Joint-degrees are available in many curriculums at K-State, he said, depending on the program, purposefulness and marketability. The most popular jointdegree programs include arts and sciences, agriculture, home economics, music and

"Students can take marketable skills acquired at K-State and go work in a public, or non-church, position," Glenn said. "In five years, a person can gain a degree at MCC in Christian education and a second degree at K-State in secondary education.

MCC students involved in the joint-degree program have an advantage over students coming out of other Christian colleges, according to some MCC students.

Manhattan Christian College President Kenneth Cable recently introduced a plan to raise $1.6 million for MCC's $3.2 million debt.

"We have the advantage of having Bible education and the advantage of having a degree from a major university," said Sydney Swain, junior in elementary education and MCC student. "The joint-degree program is one of the best things MCC has going. We can be equipped with Bible knowledge and go into other vocations such as teaching.'

Another example he cited was that students can earn degrees in Christian service at MCC and a degree in agriculture or nutrition from K-State, enabling them to travel into other countries as missionaries.

"Some countries are closed to traditional missionaries," Glenn said. "There is a rising awareness among Christians to become skilled in marketable areas, such as agriculture, nutrition and education, so they can enter those closed-door countries to work in those areas but with decidedly Christian influence.

Glenn said a person will go to a country and help with such projects as crop production while at the same time hoping to spread Christianity among the people with whom he or she comes into contact.

Each semester there are some K-State students who take classes at MCC, Glenn said. K-State students do not have to actually enter into a degree program, but classes are available for them.

Jamie Allison, senior in elementary education and MCC student, started school at K-State and took a few classes at MCC.

"I decided I wanted a degree to show for the work I'd been doing," she said. "With a degree from MCC, I have three areas I can go into: public schools, Christian schools, and Christian education ministry.

Many K-State students take courses to satisfy humanities electives, he said. Students can have their advisers help them work out a program to take classes at MCC and have the credits transfer.

"We have a unique relationship with K-State," Smale said. "We are going to be strong and continue to be strong because of that relationship.'

Students attending MCC come from throughout the United States, although the majority still come from Kansas and surrounding states, he said.

"We have a very good reputation and quite a few alumni in the Phoenix area," Smale

While MCC is not considered a seminary, it does provide the education needed for its graduates to enter the ministry, he said.

Of the school's graduates, Smale said approximately 85 percent usually enter into some form of full-time ministry, with another 10 percent entering part-time

Smale said the school's funding is solely by tuition and contributions from churches and private individuals, resulting in higher tuitions at MCC than at state-supported schools. But, the tuition is still "relatively low for a Christian college," he said.

A strong stand against terrorism by all govenments is the first step toward solving terrorist problems, said Alden T. Williams, professor of political science, in an interview.

Williams said he gives U.S. Middle Eastern policy a C-plus. The United States, he said, has been slow to exploit and take advantage of the principle defense against terrorism that every established government should, as a matter of policy, be opposed to terrorism.

Williams said the recognition of that opposition is the world's best defense against terrorism. Based on this recognition, steps of identification, pursuit and prosecution can be

The United States has been slow even to work with those governments with whom it is compatible, Williams said. The European countries work much faster than the United States because they've had terrorist problems in the past, while the United States has not. Williams said the reason for America's poor image in the Middle East is because the Reagan Adminstration has a lackadaisical regard for international law.

Williams said troublesome laws shouldn't be dismissed simply because of inconvenience. The United States has looked the other way at some violations of international law, he said, citing the attack on Palestine Liberation Organization Leader Yassir Arafat's Tunisian headquarters Oct. 1.

Williams also criticized a later incident in which the United States pursued and forced down an Egyptian jet carrying four PLO terrorists who hijacked the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro Oct. 7. Williams said this was a clear violation of international law just as the PLO hijacking was a violation.

Williams said the United States can't have it both ways - to wink at international law when it doesn't serves its interests and then to insist upon it when it does.

Misperceptions intensify terrorist acts

By JOHN WALKER, JR Collegian Reporter

Misperceptions about American policy in the Middle East have helped to intensify the recent rash of terrorist actions against the United States, according to a University authority on the subjects of hostages and hijackers.

"The mistakes stem from misperception of what is involved in the conflict, who the real parties of the conflict are, what needs to be done to resolve the conflict, (and) why the United States is viewed the way it is in the Middle East by Iranians, Arabs and Israelis," said Michael W. Suleiman, professor of political science.

Suleiman, who was born in Palestine, has been researching and writing various books and articles about the Middle East since 1965. The focus of his writing is Arab-Middle East relations.

Suleiman said one mistake the United States has made in Middle East relations is that American involvement usually takes the form of military expenditures - such as providing weapons and military training to countries sympathetic with U.S. policy - rather than diplomatic negotiations.

President Reagan's perception that the Middle East is vital to U.S. interests is correct, Suleiman said, but it should also be taken into account that some Middle Eastern countries and people are hostile to the United States and should be viewed as hostile. These countries should not be included in any kind of settlement between Palestine and Israel, Parts of the Arab world are on friendly terms with the United States and would like to improve ties. Suleiman said, but their position is weakened by Reagan administration policies.

An example of this, Suleiman said, is Reagan's attitude toward the Oct. 1 Israeli bombing of Palestine Liberation Organization headquarters in Tunisia. Sixty people were killed in the attack. The situation was made more serious by Reagan's attitude toward the attack, Suleiman said, which was that the bombings were done in self-defense and therefore justified.

This type of attitude is a formula for the breakdown of international law and order, he said.

"It is that approach that (needs) to be criticized and is not helpful in bringing about a peaceful settlement" between Israel and Palestine.

Suleiman said he feels Reagan's approach needs to be changed and a brake needs to be put on the Israeli government's actions. He said Reagan should not be critical of only Arab countries, but also any country which performs an act of terror.

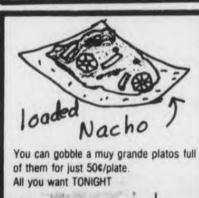

Suleiman cited Israel's attack on PLO headquarters as an example of Suleiman has his own ideas as to how hijackers should be handled and how illegal acts by terrorists should be stopped. He said one should get away from immediate and emotional actions and should pursue a diplomatic solution

Saberhagen, White lead KC to 6-1 victory over St. Louis

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS - Frank White, acting like the cleanup hitter he isn't supposed to be, hit a two-run homer and doubled in another run Tuesday night as the Kansas City Royals bounced back from two straight losses and beat the St. Louis Cardinals 6-1 in Game 3 of the World

Bret Saberhagen, the 21-year-old ace of Kansas City's pitching staff, struck out eight and allowed only six singles to stop the Cardinals and prevent the Royals from falling into a double-jeopardy situation in the bestof-seven Series.

It was the first complete game of this Series.

George Brett tied a Series record by reaching base five straight times in one game, on two singles and three walks, and Lonnie Smith had a tworun double as the Royals ended an offensive drought that had seen them score just three runs in the first two

KC had 11 hits and also benefitted from eight walks by Cardinal pit-

The Royals scored their first two runs off Cardinals right-hander Joaquin Andujar in the fourth inning on Smith's hit, then White ended yet another futile day's work for Andujar when he hit the two-run homer in the fifth. His run-scoring double came in a two-run seventh.

White's homer was the first of this World Series. It also was the first in World Series play for White, pressed into duty as a cleanup hitter after the absence of a designated hitter here had relegated Hal McRae to the

"I'm probably as strong as any second baseman in the American League," White had said earlier in defending his spot in the batting order. No one argued with him Tuesday night.

The Royals, who had blown Game 2 Sunday night after taking a 2-0 lead into the ninth, already had lost the first two games of the Series at home. It had happened only nine previous times in the World Series, and none of those teams had gone on

But the future would have looked even dimmer had the Royals fallen to 0-3, a deficit from which 16 previous teams had failed to recover. Game 4 of the Series sends Kansas City left-hander Bud Black, 10-15, against the ace of the Cardinals' staff, left-hander John Tudor, 21-8 and the winner of Game 1

Saberhagen had pitched rather poorly in two American League playoff starts, working a total of only 71/3 innings with an earned run average of 6.14. And he hurt his pitching hand in Game 7 when it was hit by a line drive.

Rumors surround World Series; KC may pursue Detroit's Gibson

One of the things I enjoyed most about my trip to Game Two of the World Series Sunday night in Kansas City was being able to talk baseball with some of the finest reporters, managers and players in the game.

Some of what I learned was "offthe-record," but I can share with you some news that might be of interest and a bit of gossip to do with as you please.

Look for the Royals to aggressively pursue outfielder Kirk Gibson in the upcoming free agent draft. Gibson has said he wants to play in a city smaller than the one in which he is currently playing -Detroit - and Kansas City certainly fits the bill.

Gibson also desires to play in a "laid-back" atmosphere, and as any Midwesterner can attest, this area is about as laid-back as any area of the country.

Gibson would fill several of the Royals' biggest needs. He is a legitimate power hitter that can drive in 100 runs a year and he is one of the best rightfielders in the game today. This is not meant to be a knock against Pat Sheridan or Darryl Motley, but the Royals need to go after Gibson like they have gone after no free agent to this point. Gibson is a "franchise-type" player - there aren't too many of those left around today.

Just think of a batting order that features Lonnie Smith, Willie Wilson, George Brett, Gibson, Frank White and Steve Balboni in the first six slots. It's enough to make a die-hard Royals fan

DAVID SVOBODA Assistant Sports Editor If the Royals are unable to sign Gibson, look for them to try to swing a deal with the Boston Red Sox.

Evans would fill the Royals' need for a power-hitting, Gold Glove right fielder, while Gutierrez could fill their need for a shortstop that can hit over .250. Sorry Buddy Biancalana, but a shortstop with a .188 batting average shouldn't be starting on an American League Championship

Dick Balderson, formerly Royals "General Manager John Schuerholz's right-hand man, is now the General Manager of the Seattle Mariners. This provides many other trade possibilities most notably one involving former University of Missouri quarterback Phil Bradley, now an outfielder for Seattle.

Seattle, like Boston, is in need of starting pitching and might be willing to part with Bradley and shortstop Jose Tartabull to get it. Bradley came into his own this season and would easily fill the need for a right fielder. Tartabull, like Gutierrez, would be a fine addition at shortstop.

Cardinal catcher Darrell Porter wants to return to Kansas City to finish his career

Porter, in a candid interview with a Karsas City newspaper reporter, admitted his desires to end his career in the city in which he had many of his best years in the game.

Porter was the starting catcher on the American League Western Division Championship teams of the late 1970s and was behind the plate when the Royals won the American League Championship

He became a free agent the following year, however, and the Royals made a feeble, unsuccessful effort to resign him.

Porter, though, would have one problem in returning to Kansas City - the lack of a starting job at catcher. Jim Sundberg has established himself as the Royals' No. 1 receiver and the club isn't likely to bump him from the lineup.

If Porter were to return to KC, he would likely have to take on a role as the left-handed designated hitter or as a left-handed pinch-hitter.

I'd love nothing more than to see Darrell back where he belongs. The Royals should have never let him go in the first place.

Miller, track program draw coach to K-State

By TONY CARBAJO Collegian Reporter

With an impressive collegiate coaching record and an extensive high-speed filming background, Scott Bennett was the logical choice when K-State Head Track Coach Steve Miller went looking for someone to coach the Wildcat field event athletes this season.

Bennett, 33, was able to incorporate the study of cinematography in his master's program at the University of Wisconsin-LaCrosse, where he received his degree in human performance and coached before coming to K-State in September. The study of human performance involved a variety of things other than cinematography for the new Wildcat coach. He studied exercise physiology, biomechanics, sport psychology, stress management and relaxation. He said each area of expertise can be carried over into

"I think I have a pretty good understanding of the body movements," Bennett said. "I understand how the body functions and how it thinks. That applies directly to the field events.

Bennett said he believes coming to an established track and field program like K-State's will improve his abilities as a coach and teacher. He

Berth in nationals near miss for James, Botha

By TONY CARBAJO Collegian Reporter

Not often has a K-State varsity tennis player had a chance to participate in a collegiate national meet.

But this past weekend at the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association Regional tournament in Wichita, the Wildcats were one match away from sending two men's players to the I.T.C.A National tourney in Houston.

Doubles players Kris James and Deon Botha won three rounds in the regional meet before falling 3-6, 4-6 in the semifinals to Kevin Brady and Larry Pascal of the University of Kansas. A win would have guaranteed a spot for James and Botha in the national meet. 'Kris and Deon gave our program some tremendous wins," said K-State Head Coach Steve Bietau. "This was a very major step for our program. Considering last year's Big Eight champion - Oklahoma State - didn't qualify a team in the semifinals, I felt very good to come away from there in the position we

Along the way, the duo defeated KU's Dave Brody and Darren Herman 4-6, 6-1, 6-2 and Wichita State University's pair of Jeremy Grubi and Stephen Salthouse 6-1, 6-3. Ironically, all doubles teams that made it to the semifinals were Kansas schools.

Advancing to the fourth round in region's biggest collegiate tournament in the fall pleased Bietau.

States in the region are Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Iowa, Oklahoma and Colorado.

"We were expected to lose in the first round in the tournament." he said. "It's nice to see Kansas State up there with the big boys when they're not supposed to be.

In the singles portion of the regional tourney, Bietau was less than satisfied in the results. Scott Chandler, the No. 2 singles player,

Hartman to rely on recruits

By TOM PERRIN Staff Writer

With the start of practices on Oct. 15, preparations are underway for a potentially pivotal season of K-State men's basketball.

Wildcat fans have endured three consecutive sub-par seasons and seem to be impatient for a good basketball team. Only a few years ago, K-Staters could nearly always rely on a winning basketball team to relieve the frustrations of another losing Wildcat football season.

For the last three years, however, K-State's basketball team has been entrenched in the lower division of the Big Eight Conference standings.

Only one starter, 6-foot-8-inch senior forward Ben Mitchell, returns from last year's team that finished with 14 wins and 14 losses and a 5-9 conference record - good enough for a fifth-place tie.

Despite this, Coach Jack Hartman is optimistic about the prospects for the 1985-86 season. The reason behind Hartman's optimism is the new recruiting class - one Hartman believes could be his most talented

"We've improved our personnel situation considerably," Hartman said in a recent interview.

The team will have a lack of experience this year, Hartman said, but he said he believes the new talent can compensate for the lack of experience. K-State will field the youngest basketball team Hartman has ever coached on the major college level.

"It will take a certain amount of time to offset that loss (in experience)," Hartman said. "But I think we've improved the personnel situation to the point where we can offset that.

One new player Hartman is counting on to elevate K-State from the bottom of the league standings is Norris Coleman, a 6-foot-8-inch sophomore from Jacksonville, Fla., who spent the past four years in the Army.

'Norris Coleman will make a considerable impact," Hartman said. "Even though he doesn't have much formal basketball experience, he has an excellent feel for the game and knowledge of the game.'

Of the eight newcomers Hartman originally signed to play for the 'Cats, two will not be able to play. Chris Morris, a 6-foot-5-inch guardforward, was declared academically ineligible and was sent to junior college to improve his grades. Anthony Smith, another Army player, was not able to get an early release from the Army to come to K-State. Smith is a 6-foot-8-inch forward from Atlanta.

Among the other newcomers in the Wildcat program, Percy Eddie, a 6-foot-7-inch junior forward, is the only upper classman. Eddie played at Colby Community College last season. New freshmen include 6-3 guard Benny Green, 6-0 guard Rodney Heard, 6-5 forward Lance Simmons and 6-3 guard Ty Walker.

For K-State to have a successful season this year, Hartman said the new players are going to have to contribute. Other than Mitchell, the only returner who averaged more than three points per game last year was guard Joe Wright. Mitchell averaged 8.7 points a game and Wright scored 8.8 points.

From the look of things, Hartman will not hesitate to use his new players, either.

'We could have as many as three or four new players starting for us this fall," Hartman said. "How quickly our young players contribute will be very important."

Bennett

said working with Miller, who is widely recognized as one of the top coaches in the country, will be a vital part of his learning process.

"One of the reasons I came here was because of Coach Miller. I think as long as you're in a good program where you are constantly learning something from an individual, you are benefitting yourself," he said.

Bennett said his goal for this season is to get the best performances possible from each of his athletes. He said that is all a coach can do who stepped into a program with kids he did not recruit.

"All any coach can do is get the maximum potential out of each athlete," Bennett said. "If that means being a conference champion or All-American then so be it. But, if it just means they have matured from their freshman to sophomore year, then there is satisfaction in that, too.

"We have some good athletes already here and hopefully I will make them better.'

Bennett looks at his assistant coaching duties as a minimum fouryear commitment. He said it takes that long to bring in a group of athletes and judge their accomplishments.

"If you can see a change in four years then you know you have done something," Bennet said, "versus getting a good athlete right off the bat and saying, 'I coached this guy into being an All-American."

Teaching something to an athlete on the track is not the only part of coaching, Bennett said. He said recruiting is also important.

"There is a real personal contact we're (coaches) running during recruiting," he said. "Just because someone can triple jump 53 feet doesn't mean they will be good for our program.

"Recruiting is not just recruiting performances, it's recruiting an individual. You as a coach must be able to get along with that individual. The person has to be a credit to the school, to the program and to the University as a good citizen."

Bennett said he hasn't set any time tables for when he would like to be a head coach and call his own shots. He is just taking it one step at a time.

'Someday I would like to be a head coach but I am in no particular hurry." he said. "It will happen someday, but my ego is not such that I want it now and (that) it is of utmost importance."

were violated during the planning stages, Jackson said.

The environmental guidelines require all new construction be kept within suitable walking distance of the core campus. Specifically, athletic facilities shouldn't be isolated from the campus, Jackson

"The coliseum isn't accessible to students," Jackson said. "Students cannot walk at 10 below zero to games at that place.

Jackson said the guidelines specify that availablity of land is insufficient reason to spread out the campus. Greater density should be considered an asset and the pedestrian character of the campus should be maintained.

From the Ahearn Feasibility Study completed in 1977, the University knew Ahearn could be renovated, Jackson said. The University environmental guideline requiring old buildings to be used in place of new construction was ignored by the University during the coliseum planning, Jackson said.

The coliseum site is some of the crummiest soil on campus," Jackson said. "No site study was ever done to determine this.

Jackson said he believes the minimal involvement of students and faculty during the planning process was one of the worst violations of the environmenal guidelines.

The guidelines require all proposed changes in construction to be documented and to adhere to University guidelines. The increase in seating from 15,000 seats to 16,000 seats was not properly documented, Jackson said. It failed to comply with the environmental guidelines

Bloodmobile short of goal

By The Collegian Staff

The University's blood donation quota could be in trouble without more support from students and faculty, Circle K International Bloodmobile chairpersons said.

Not enough people are giving blood to meet this year's goal, said Jeanette Roberts, senior in social work and a Bloodmobile chaiper-

"Our goal is 1,400 units (of blood) or 350 units per day." Roberts said. "That goal is up from last year, which was 1,200 units.

Tuesday's blood donations to the Red Cross Bloodmobile sponsored by Circle K International totaled 333 units

Circle K exceeded its goal in the spring by collecting 1,283 units of blood during the Feb. 19-20 Bloodmobile campaign. The Bloodmobile will run from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. through Friday in the Union's KSU rooms. The public, as well as faculty and students, are invited to donate.

The normal procedure is to set up an appointment to donate blood, but because of the lack of participation Circle K is accepting walk-ins, Roberts said.

Currently, the University is ranked No. 1 for blood donations within the Wichita Red Cross Bloodmobile region. The Wichita Region Red Cross Bloodmobile is ranked the No. 1 region in the na-

There are no health risks involved with giving blood and the the procedure takes little time, said Dr. Larry Moeller, assistant student health physician at Lafene Student Health Center.

Cable said he felt there was a base of support for the fund, coming not only the Manhattan community, but also from students contacting their home churches and other churches. He described the fund drive as an 'extensive national effort.

This is virtually an impossible task," Cable said, "But we are not limited to the human point of view.' In spite of the current "financial cloud," Cable said this past weekend Fall Festival, the school's major recruiting effort, still drew between 130 and 150 prospective students.

Cable said he viewed the prospective students, their churches and parents as indicators of the school's backing. During the conference, Cable said it would be sufficient to reduce the current overall $3.2 million debt to $1 million, and have an outside accounting firm determine the school's financial viability. If that is not achieved after the 45 days, Cable said, all contributions would be returned to donors, and "MCC would go out of existence.

Cable also said the school has about $1 million in pledges uncollected due to the poor farm economy, which is requiring the school to accept only cash or assets that can be readily turned into cash. "(The money) has to come in now," he said. MCC Vice President for Development Gary Edwards said "this plan

Legislators consider Washburn

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA — Legislators expressed opposition Wednesday to a proposal to include Washburn University of Topeka in the Kansas Board of Regents system.

Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, was one of several legislators to express disinterest in the proposal, which would allow the university to be administered by the state.

Knopp said this is not the right time to debate the issue because of state financial problems. He said the economy of the state is not growing, so the tax base is not increasing.

"This is not the time to raise taxes or to look for new programs to fund when the state economy is not growing," Knopp said. "I don't see a time in the immediate future, in the next two to three years, when Washburn should become a state university."

The proposal was discussed at a meeting Wednesday of the Legislative Educational Planning Committee.

Rep. Denise Apt, R-Iola and chairperson of the committee, said she believes Washburn is exactly what a municipal university should be: responsive to the needs of its community. And she fears it would lose its unique qualities if taken into the state system.

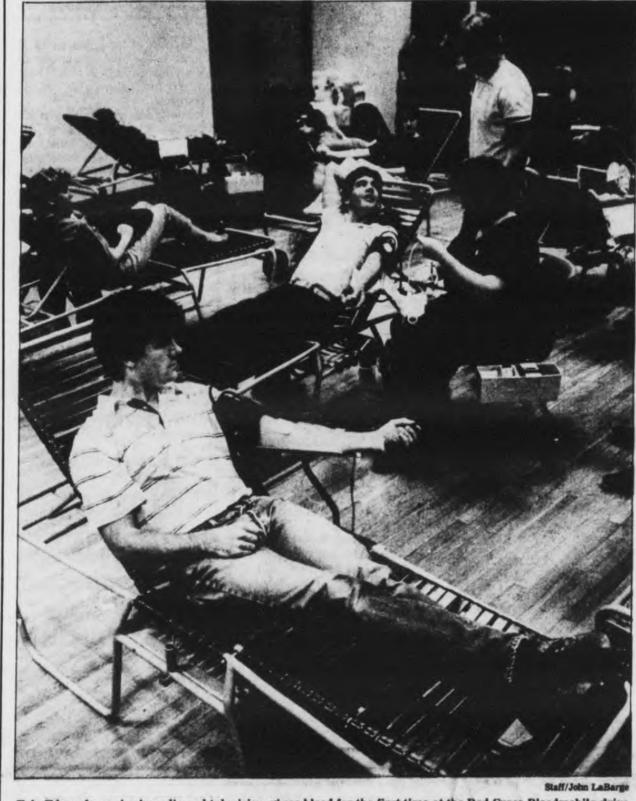

"Washburn meets the needs of Topeka very well as a municipal university and as a free standing school it can change quickly to meet the needs of the community," Apt said during committee discussion of its summer study of the question. "If it becomes part of the regents, it's liable to lose some of that flexibility. I do think Washburn fulfills its mission very well." four-year university or a community college in Topeka, but such a university should be supported by those who use it rather than by the

Rep. Ed Lowther, R-Emporia, agreed with that assessment and echoed the sentiment that there is no room in the regents' system for Washburn.

"There's no crisis or anything here," Lowther said. "They are fulfilling their role or mission. They're doing a good job. I guess they don't like the tax burden. But I

Bloodmobile surpasses daily goal

By The Collegian Staff

On its second day on campus, the fall Bloodmobile surpassed its goal of 350 pints per day with a total of 379 units of blood donated Wednesday.

The figures were announced by Jeanette Roberts, senior in social work, and Karen Grause, junior in accounting, student chairpersons of the Circle K International cosponsored blood drive. The Bloodmobile is also sponsored by the American Red Cross.

"Things have been real slow in the morning, but in the afternoon the donors really pick up," Grause

A goal of 350 units has been set for each day. A total of 333 units was donated Tuesday, making the two-day total 712.

The Bloodmobile exceeded its goal last spring by 83 units of blood, for at total of 1,283 units.

In conjunction with the Red Cross, a competition among the University living groups has been designed.

Higher price index reflects slow pace of current inflation

From Staff and Wire Reports

A strong U.S. dollar, falling oil prices and low mortgage rates and commodity prices are behind "the best news on inflation" in about 15 years, said Lloyd Thomas, professor of economics.

But because inflation is running at such a slow pace, the government's Consumer Price Index rose only 0.2 percent for the fifth straight month giving Social Security recipients their smallest cost-of-living raise since benefits were tied to inflation.

Added to the Labor Department's just released September retail price measure - the final figure added to a federal income tax "indexing" formula - a situation is created that is good for the average taxpayer but one that may also cause hardships for older persons.

"Older people see their Social Security benefits as an important and major source of income," said George Peters, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work. "It (the small benefit increase) creates a hardship, and that means they will have to cut back

The 3.1 percent Social Security benefit increase - based on a slightly different set of statistics than those used for tax indexing - works out to a $14 monthly increase for the average receipient starting

Jan. 1. The 3.7 percent tax indexing change - based on the new formula comparing fiscal 1985 inflation to 1984 - will translate to a barely noticeable rise in the average American's 1986 taxes. The standard deduction for single people will go from $2,390 to $2,480 and for couples from $3,540 to $3,670.

A 1984 rule to eliminate "bracket creep" means tax table brackets will be widened by the same 3.7 percent, Thomas said.

"If (a taxpayer's) income keeps up with inflation he won't have to worry about getting kicked into higher tax brackets," he said.

In all, the modest changes are a reflection of analysts' months-long assertions that inflation is no longer a major factor in the U.S. economy.

Donald Straszheim, of Merrill Lynch, Pierce Fenner and Smith said the declining dollar is likely to push inflation up slightly in 1986, 'maybe a few tenths of a percent, but not dramatically so. We see continued good news on inflation."

Robert Wescott, of Wharton which is projecting 1986 inflation at about 3.5 percent, said, "With commodity

KPL requests rate hike to cover growing costs

By The Collegian Staff

In a move that may affect some 550,000 Kansas consumers, the KPL to cover increasing costs in Gas Service Co. has requested an increase in natural gas rates.

The request, filed with the Kansas Corporation Commission, asks for a 5.2 percent increase, which could result in an increase in revenues of $21.2 million.

KPL Gas Service chairman William Wall said the increase would not be reflected on customer's bills until after this winter. Before the rate increase can be enacted, public hearings and study by the KCC are required by law.

Gary Hayden of the KCC office in Topeka said no public hearing dates have been set, but they would probably not be before February or Wall said the increase request was operating company's delivery system, wages, equipment and other operating costs. He said the request was not to increase returns on stockholder's investments.

While various factors such as climate and individual usage make it difficult to determine the impact on consumers, Wall said for most customers the monthly bill would still be lower than for the same time period of 1983-1984.

He attributed the reduction to buying gas at "substantially" lower prices during the last two years, resulting in lower prices for the utility company's customers.

Reagan's impromptu remarks often require public apology

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan has stumbled over his own words lately when asked to deal unrehearsed with sensitive issues ranging from arms control to apartheid.

Inalysis

Whether attributable to fatigue. carelessness or mere inattention to detail, the president's statements have prompted enough concern that he himself has felt compelled to try to clarify them. And his aides, who long ago stopped trying to correct factual errors in Reagan's impromptu remarks, have more than once been left without an explanation of what the president was talking about.

During Reagan's 1980 presidential campaign and early in his first term, Democratic opponents and many news reports challenged Reagan's use of supposed facts that just didn't check out. Assigning "truth squads" to verify numbers became standard practice after the president's news conferences.

The White House eventually stopped responding to suggestions Reagan had made a mistake on this or that.

'The United States is still well behind the Soviet Union in literally every kind of offensive weapon...'

-President Reagan

That claim of total Soviet military superiority was not right.'

—Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn of the Senate Armed Services Committee

In recent weeks, however, Reagan has made some gaffes even he felt compelled to correct.

Two weeks after he told an interviewer in August that South Africans "have eliminated the segregation that we once had in our own country," he publicly apologized, saying he "carelessly gave the impression" that he believed segregation had been eliminated in the white-ruled nation.

At a news conference two weeks later, Reagan said that, "in spite of some of the misinformation that has been spread around, the United States is still well behind the Soviet Union in literally every kind of offensive weapon - both conventional and in the strategic weapons." Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, an influential Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee who usually supports the administration on defense issues, said "that claim of total Soviet military superiority was

Just a few days later, during a trip to Tennessee to promote an overhaul of the income tax system, Reagan was asked about reports the Soviets were proposing a 40-percent reduction in nuclear weapons and replied he'd like to see a plan for even larger cuts than that.

Upon leaving Knoxville, he stopped to tell reporters he "was misunderstood in trying to call an answer" to them earlier in the day.

It was in a similar question-andanswer exchange on the run in Chicago on Oct. 10, when said he would be willing for the Palestine Liberation Organization to try the pirates who murdered American tourist Leon Klinghoffer.

Again, he reappeared later to tell reporters he had not meant to say that; he should have said they could only be brought to justice by the authorities of a sovereign nation.

Reagan almost always speaks from a prepared text when appearing before an outside group.

Peres threatens war if talks fail

TEL AVIV. Israel - Prime Minister Shimon Peres said Wednesday that if Jordan rejects his appeal for direct talks leading to peace in the Middle East, some Arab countries may seek another war.

In an interview with Israel television's U.S. correspondent, broadcast here, Peres said King Hussein's refusal would lead to a "new deterioration. ... It is not inconceivable that at a certain stage war will erupt.'

Peres spoke in New York two days after he made the proposal in a speech to the U.N. General Assembly. He said in the interview that the deterioration would take time and might not even be evident initially, but would create the nucleus for "the establishment of an Arab coalition that will seek an alternative to peace. ... That is what we have to prvent."

An earthquake measuring 6 on the Richter scale can cause severe damage in the local area.

Survey reported. The earthquake occurred at 10:28 a.m. CDT and was centered near the Pacific coast, about 80 miles southwest of Guatemala City, according to USGS spokesman Donovan Kelly. Guatemala, which has a long history of earthquakes, experienced a slightly smaller earthquake of 4.2 on Oct. 11 that caused considerable damage.

WASHINGTON - Newly uncovered information that China has recently offered sensitive nuclear technology to Iran and other nations threatens to derail the U.S.-China nuclear cooperation agreement signed in July, congressional experts and other analysts said Wednesday.

They voiced concern that China will help other nations, including Iran, acquire a nuclear weapons capability in violation of the spirit of the U.S.-China nuclear agreement, which provides the framework for sales of U.S. commercial nuclear technology to China.

WASHINGTON - President Reagan on Wednesday nominated Benjamin L. Burgess to become the new U.S. Attorney for Kansas, according to a spokesman for Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan.

Dual health degree combines nutrition, physical education

By BOB SCHEIBLER Collegian Reporter

In response to the way Americans view health and nutrition, two faculty members have developed a dual degree program which combines nutrition and exercise

The program was developed by Katharine Grunewald, associate professor of foods and nutrition and Tony Wilcox, associate professor of physical education, dance and leisure studies.

K-State is the first Big Eight school to have a program of this type. Students who graduate in the program will receive a bachelor's degree in foods and nutrition and a bachelor's degree in physical education, dance and leisure studies with an option in exercise science.

The program is designed to give students background in both areas. After graduating from this program students could work in YMCAs, YWCAs, fitness camps, athletic clubs and health programs offered by hospitals.

"I had a lot of students coming to me wanting to get a degree in nutrition and exercise science and I just didn't see any way they could do it. I saw that there was a need for a program like this," Grunewald said.

The program consists of 150 credit hours and is designed to take four to course load and summer school enrollment.

Coursework consists of about 40 percent professional courses in foods and nutrition and exercise science, 25 percent physical and biological percent 25 sciences. communications, humanities, social sciences, and international studies and 10 percent in unrestricted electives.

"This is not an easy program to complete - it will be a challenge," Grunewald said.

Currently six students are enrolled in the program. Grunewald said she expects the number of students in the program to increase.

Representatives from Kansas. Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota will attend the leadership conference, which runs Friday through Sunday, said Sharon Miller, graduate in public administration and co-chairperson of the conference. attending the conference are usually floor presidents, hall presidents, advisers, general staff or residence hall association representatives. She said the conference was open to any student who wished to attend, however Miller said the annual regional leadership conference focuses on leadership and programming at residence halls.

United Nations fails to keep world peace

With the 40th anniversary of the United Nations being celebrated this week much media attention has been focused on the track record of the United Nations and its possible future. Is the United Nations an important medium in keeping world order or is it another body of bureaucracy that is largely ineffective?

On June 26, 1945, the signing of the Charter of the United Nations took place. The Charter was an outline for a plan to create an institution where sovereign nations could come together to work for world peace. Things looked great on paper, but as we can tell by looking back at the last 40 years, actual benefits are hard to find.

Since the United Nations was founded, more than 100 armed conflicts have taken place. Of these, the United Nations has taken action on only a few, and the action it has taken has been miniscule. The "peace troops" the United Nations has sent to these conflicts in order to restore peace have been outmanned, underpowered and led by silly "rules of war." These are the same burdens that U.N. peacekeeping forces carried with them into Korea and Lebanon which made such a mockery of their peace efforts.

The fact is, we are dealing with sovereign states and there is little an outside body, such as the United Nations, can do unless it wants to commit itself entirely. With the current rivalries occurring in the world, such a commitment will never be made

So what can the United Nations do if it can't prevent war or help end regional conflicts? One thing it can do well is spend Columnist money - lots of it. And mostly American money at that. The United States contributes more than 25 percent of the United Nations budget. Many Americans are calling for the United States to cut back its funding. The United States has started to realize it hasn't been receiving much for its money in the specialized agencies of the United Nations. This was the main reason for our withdrawl from UNESCO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. We were paying more than $7 million a year to finance an agency that had little to offer the Western world. Great Britain is withdrawing at the end of the year, and many other Western nations are calling for reform in the agency.

Collegian

The United Nations was created to hold a membership of peace-seeking nations. At this time the United Nations is harboring two unofficial political groups that do not represent nations at all, the Palestine Liberation Organization and the South West Africa People's Organization.

The PLO is a terrorist nation known for causing unrest in the Middle East. The latter, known as SWAPO, is a Marxist body fighting for control of South West Africa/Namibia. These two groups have no business participating in any United Nations

So what should the United States do as far as its membership in the United Nations is concerned? Many are calling for the United States to withdraw from this organization. I feel that this would be a grave error for U.S. foreign policy since it would lead other nations to believe the United States cares little about world peace. What the United States should do is cut back its funding until it reflects the funding the United Nations receives from other members of the Security Council.

The United States should work with other nations in reforming the way the United Nations conducts business and should press for a complete overhaul of the United Nations' specialized agencies.

Also, the United Nations should be moved to a more politically neutral nation, such as Switzerland. This would help solve the many diplomatic and security problems known to occur when a nation plays host to foreign diplomats. This would also solve the many problems the United States has had with Soviet spies that are residing in our country under U.N. diplomatic guise.

The signers of the original United Nations Charter had a noble aspiration - world peace. It is only too bad that this attempt has been slowed by the United Nations' own selfparalysis.

Blood donors lead region

Give blood. It could be your give blood. chance to save a life.

Bloodmobile region for blood donations. This is an accomplishment of which majority, blood donation is K-Staters can be proud.

Last spring, Circle K International — the organization sponsoring the Bloodmobile collected 1,283 units of blood, meeting the goal set by Circle K and, in fact, surpassing it by 83 units.

This fall, Circle K increased the goal to 1,400 units or 350 units per day. So far this year, K-State is on schedule to surpass the goal

Day one totals from Tuesday were disappointing, with only 333 units of blood collected. However, Wednesday's donations totaled 379 units, putting K-State back on schedule to meet the goal.

Donating blood takes only about an hour of a person's time. While some college students are kept busy with school, campus activities, jobs and other things, most people can surely find an hour of their time sometime during the week to come in and

Some people are fearful about K-State is currently ranked No. giving blood because of the pain 1 in the Wichita Red Cross supposedly involved in the process. However, these fears are unfounded. For the vast practically painless.

Blood donation is also free of health risks. Some have confused blood donation with blood transfusions, where acquired immune deficiency syndrome has been contracted in remote instances. A person simply can't get hurt from donating blood.

On top of everything else, blood donations can save a life. Without blood donations, many people would have prematurely lost their lives.

While response at K-State and in the Wichita Red Cross Bloodmobile region is among the best in the United States, an overall shortage of blood exists at the nation's hospitals. In other words, every unit counts.

Everyone is encouraged to give blood either today or tomorrow from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Union's KSU rooms.

United Nations seeks global cooperation

"The United Nations is a worthless organization. It provides a cover for international espionage. It's anti-western. It wastes money on overpaid staff. It does nothing to stop wars and nobody really respects it. Why don't we just pull out and save our money?" So goes the basic American attitude toward the United Americans expect the United Nations to solve all the world's problems (in the way we would like them solved) and when it doesn't, they are disenchanted. They would do well to remember that the United Nations is made up of 159 extremely diverse members, and that from its beginning in 1945, the United Nations has been limited in what it can do.

At its inception, the United Nations had 51 members. The United States, with its western allies and Latin allies, controlled 34 votes. The only other significant bloc was the Soviet one with all of six votes. Debate focused on the cold war and the outcomes of votes were always predetermined.

Since then, membership has more than tripled, with the majority of new nations coming from the Third World. The process of decolonialization, supported by the United Nations, radically altered U.N. composition and focus. "Southern" problems of hunger and development took their place beside arms control and superpower conflict.

The purposes of the United Nations in 1945

VIRGIL WIEBE Guest Columnist

were lofty ("to save suceeding generations from the scourge of war...To promote social progress and better standards of life") but its principles ("the sovereign equality of all members") were limiting. It was and is truly international - that is, based entirely on the integrity of its member nations. In other words, it is no better or worse than its membership.

Limits also come financially. Media coverage of salaries of a few officials mask the fact that the United Nations operates on a budget of about $700 million, the same as that of the New York City Fire Department. Total expenditures of all U.N.-related activities come to $4 billion annually. (The Pentagon spent $4.2 billion one September day in 1983.)

In spite of these limitations, the U.N. system has worked to better the condition of humanity. Through international years and conferences, it has raised consciousness on such issues as the environment, the exploitation of women and children and the rights of workers. The World Health Organization led the effort to wipe out smallpox. The U.N. Development Program coordinates more than 5,000 projects worldwide. The U.N. Commission for Refugees aids millions of people displaced by war and famine. And the list goes on and on.

While not the cure-all for the world's security problems, the United Nations has provided a forum as well as action on the issues of arms control and world peace. World leaders are compelled to give at least tacit support for peace and justice, and that is the first step toward true international cooperation.

The United Nations is far from perfect and that reflects the state of the world. As the world becomes ever increasingly interconnected and tensions between superpowers heighten, the need for a place where the ideals of world peace, order and justice are upheld becomes greater.

Solutions to world problems will not come out of the United Nations, but the United Nations can serve to bring those problems to the attention of the world and pressure the powerful to act.

This basic question should be considered, "Is humankind better off with or without the United Nations?" As I see it, there can be only one answer.

Studies differ on estrogen effects

By The Associated Press

BOSTON - Two papers examining the effects of estrogen pills on older women's hearts reached the New England Journal of Medicine at almost the same time. One suggested that the hormone prevents heart disease, the other that it causes it.

Both studies were found to be valid, and both are being published in Thursday's issue of the journal. The conflicting results, say experts, hold lessons about how science works and what should be made of its conclusions.

'This illuminates that one should never take as gospel what is published in the New England Journal of Medicine but should take it as the current state of the art," said Dr. Jay Winsten, assistant dean of the Harvard School of Public Health. "If only one group had submitted to the New England Journal, the press would be reporting one conclusion or the other, depending on the luck of the draw."

Dr. Marcia Angell, deputy editor of the journal, said the papers were sent independently to outside experts for evaluation, and both appeared to be well done and worth publishing. So the weekly magazine ran them back to back.

Both studies rely on epidemiology, a research method that finds links between the way people live and the diseases they suffer. Experts examine the drugs people take, the food they eat or the things they do. Then the researchers see whether people's habits correspond with the ills that befall them.

This tool has been widely used in the past to examine the effects of estrogen supplements taken during menopause and beyond. The hormone relieves hot flashes and other unpleasant symptoms of the change of life. Epidemiological studies have shown the estrogen protects women from brittle bones but increases their risk of uterine cancer.

Since between 2 million and 3 million older women in the United States take estrogen, the pills' potential effect on heart disease is also important.

Researchers at the Framingham Heart Study, a long-running survey of the health of residents in one community, considered 1,234 post-menopausal women who lived in the Boston suburb. They looked for an association between estrogen use and development of chest pain, heart attack or death from heart disease.

They found that the risk of heart disease was almost twice as high among women who took estrogen as among those who didn't."

The other team, from Harvard Medical School, took a similar approach. They surveyed 121,964 female nurses, and they compared the incidence of heart attack and fatal heart disease among postmenopausal users and non-users of

The risk of heart disease was less than a third as high among the women taking estrogen. No one knows precisely how these two studies could have arrived at opposite conclusions.

Hostesses promote K-State as escorts to high schoolers

By MARGARET MAY Collegian Reporter

New hostess programs are giving K-State women the opportunity to promote the University by being escorts at football

One hostess program teams K-State women with high school athletes interested in the football program. Women from nine sororities volunteer their time to meet with high school athletes and their parents to promote K-State campus activities and educational programs, said Angela O'Hara, junior in journalism and mass communications. O'Hara is in charge of the program for Panhellenic Council.

The main function of the hostesses is to "be K-State", O'Hara said. The hostesses do not promote the athletic programs, they promote the University by telling why they like K-State and decided to go to school here. They also try to answer any questions the incoming freshmen might ask, she said.

The hostesses go to the athletic department two hours before the game to meet the men and their parents and listen to a scouting report, O'Hara said. Then they escort their guests to a lunch or brunch, depending on the time of the game.

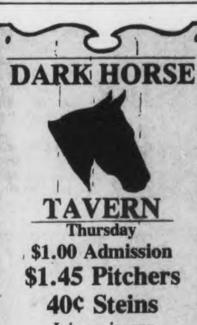

The other hostess program involves four women who are in charge of special guests. These guests support K-State and its programs and are invited to sit in the press box during the game.

The hostesses are Mary Vanier, sophomore in business administration; Leslye Schneider, sophomore in pre-med; Sherry Mooney, junior in management; and Marcia Finnell, sophomore in business administration.

The hostesses are in charge of the press box area, said Craig Renfro, field representative for the athletic department. They come to the stadium two hours before the games, put seat and name tags out, make coffee and give each guest a roster and program, he said.

"The guests arrive one hour before kick off and are served lunch by the hostesses," he said. At halftime, the guests are served drinks and cookies.

"We get to meet a lot of alumns of K-State that have done a lot for the athletic department or the University," Vanier said. "We meet lots of interesting people."

Patrons sponsor book sale for libraries

By TRISH MEHAFFEY Staff Writer

In a effort to aid Farrell Library's budget, Friends of the KSU Libraries is sponsoring its third annual book sale from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. today in the lobby of Farrell with all proceeds going to Friends.

There will be 3,500 pleasure and academic books on sale, said Patty Cray, library assistant in the gifts and exchange unit. Hardback books will be $1 and paperbacks will cost 25

Donated books came from students, staff, faculty and community members and others from department libraries and Farrell, Cray said.

The KSU Friends of the Libraries organization is made up of students, faculty and staff who provide support for the library such as purchasing new books. There is a membership fee to join. 'The book sale made over $800 last year," Cray said. "We get rid of old material and help students at the same time get supplementary textbooks for their studies.'

The book sale is a small contribution to the book budget, Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said. He stressed that they were selling surplus library books.

One reason behind raising funds for the library budget is to gain incorporation into the Association of Research Libraries. The ARL is a 125 select-member organization consisting of academic and nonacademic libraries across the United States and Canada, Hobrock said. Farrell isn't included, but could be a possible member if the budget is raised, which is one ARL

In order for a library to be admitted to the ARL it has to meet criteria for four consecutive years, based on its resources, Hobrock said.

"Being a member means that we have a library that can academically support the University," Hobrock said. "Our justification for wanting to improve is that we don't compare with other institutions." Hobrock said the ARL was organized in the 1930s, but a statistical analysis, comparing each library in the United States and Canada, began only 10 years ago.

Hobrock said he has been working on the ARL project for the past three years with the committee to improve the library and the current University administration doing everything possible to help, he said.

'The condition of the library didn't happen overnight and can't be fixed overnight," Hobrock said. "If we

Police randomly fire at African protestors

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - An opposition group in Parliament on Wednesday accused police of shooting indiscriminately in their attempt to quell bitter street rioting around Cape Town, where police reported four more deaths.

Officers manning a new fastaction gun that fires rubber bullets were seen behaving as if they were "trying out their new toy," said a member of the Progressive Federal Party's "Unrest Monitoring Committee."

A spokesman at police headquarters in Pretoria, speaking on condition of anonymity, said only the contents of the report should be filed "at the nearest police station" for investigation.

Gen. Constand Viljoen, chief of the South African Defense Force, said "malicious elements" were trying to discredit security forces by spreading rumors of brutality by the police and soldiers. A riot patrol fired shotguns and tear gas at a mob of blacks stoning vehicles in the Guguletu black township near Cape Town, killing a black man, police headquarters said Wednesday.

Police said two bodies were recovered in the Crossroads black squatter area east of Cape Town. One black was killed by shotgun pellets, and the other was apparently killed by gasoline burns, they said.

A mixed-race man was shot dead in the nearby Hanover Park mixed-race suburb Wednesday

Residents who saw the shooting were divided on whether the man who fired was a police officer or a vigilante, said a reporter.

Food aid curtails Ethiopian death rate

By The Associated Press

SEKOTA, Ethiopia - A year ago in the mountains ringing Sekota, people were dying of starvation by the hundreds every day. Now, after a huge international effort to alleviate Ethiopia's famine, people are still dying, but the numbers are lower.

Near newly dug graves, women and children scratch in the rocky soil for a few seeds of grass to help them stay alive.

This isolated village in northern Wollo region, about 250 miles north of the pockets of despair which still exist in Ethiopia.

Because of its remoteness, lack of good roads and a large presence in the area of guerrillas of the Tigre People's Liberation Front, Sekota has stayed outside the mainstream of the famine relief effort.

A month ago, a truck convoy braved an attack by insurgents and made its way over tortuous roads to deliver food to Sekota. At about the same time, British Royal Air Force Hercules transports airdropped food

That was the last food from outside to reach the village, where a few staffers from the International Red Cross and the French-Belgian volunteers' group Medicins sans Frontieres (Doctors without Borders) maintain a feeding center for about 2,000 people.

A year ago, the government's relief and rehabilitation commission was coping almost alone with a famine that affected an estimated 8 million of Ethiopia's 42 million people. Today, scores of relief agencies from around the world help Ethiopia's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission run more than 200 food distribution centers around the But none of them can guarantee to get food regularly to such places as Sekota. The government estimates the country as a whole will still need 1.2 million tons of food aid in 1986.

Judy Love, assistant professor of art, takes time out to feed and pet one of her younger rams, Crenshaw. Love raises all of her own sheep for fleece that she will later spin and weave.

Wool: a shear delight

Judy Love, assistant professor of art, began spinning and weaving wool about 20 years ago, and in the process, she developed a second hobby — sheep raising.

Love will demonstrate her weaving technique today from 11 a.m to noon in the Union Art Gallery as part of the Union Program Council Arts Committee Mid-day Arts series. The UPC events are twice a month and free to the public.

She began raising sheep about two years ago with four black sheep. She has watched her flock grow to almost 30.

Before Love and her husband, David Weyerts, acquired the sheep, she received fleece for spinning and weaving from friends, who were her main wool suppliers.

"Two years ago, my friend drove by with a trailer stuffed with sheep, and without looking at each other, we (she and her husband) picked out four sheep," Love said. "And we didn't know anything about sheep."

The couple has extended this hobby by raising the sheep and experimenting with various breeds' fleece to develop colors and textures with which to work.

"I enjoy having that type of control over the quality of the fleece," Love said.

She began teaching a spinning and weaving course through the Department of Art about 12 years ago. She realized that finding quality fleece for spinning was difficult, and this spurned the couple's interest in raising sheep themselves.

The sheep raised near Manhattan are raised mainly for meat. Love said it was difficult to find quality fleece without going to a catalog and paying $4.50 to $8 per pound.

"The quality of the fleece depends on the length and crimp (the wave of the fleece) as well as the luster," she said. "It really depends on what you're going to be making

The coarser, longer wool, which comes from Lincoln sheep, is woven into rugs. The softer fleece, coming from the Rambolay or Marino sheep, is much finer. This is used for sweaters or blankets. The couple has one Lincoln ram and two Lincoln ewes, but for the most part, the couple's sheep are mixed breeds.

As the hobby grew, Love did a great deal of reading on the subject. Her favorite book is "The History of Sheep," published in 1837. From her research, Love decided she wanted either a Lincoln or Border Leister ram. These two breeds have a luster that fleece types lack. The couple purchased their first Lincoln ram in Washington and their second ram, a Border Leister cross, in Southern Missouri.

"That luster carries on to at least the second generation," Love said. "There is a sheen to it."

Lincoln sheep produce about 12 to 15 inches of fleece a year. The couple usually shear their sheep when the fleece reaches about 5 inches, twice a year. It takes about 10 minutes to shear one sheep.

"We're in no hurry, we would rather have a good quality of wool," Love said. Love takes students in her spinning and weaving class to their farm located in Zeandale, about 10 miles east of Manhattan, to observe the shearing. After shearing, Love begins the spinning process.

'Spinning is a very relaxing activity and more mobile than weaving," Love said.

Love's spinning wheel is imported from New Zealand. Wheels generally cost from about 12 years ago.

After spinning the wool, Love begins the procedure of dyeing the wool. The first step is to gather plants, flowers, leaves, roots or stems to use for dye. She boils these for one hour to extract pigment from the plants.

She then adds a mordant - metallic salt a chemical that makes the dye blend into the fiber, making the color permanent. When this is put into the bucket of dye, it gives the fleece a color, depending on which mordant was used, as well as setting the color.

The metallic salt is purchased from a weaving supply store. Before this metallic salt was available commercially, different types of metal buckets, such as copper and iron, were used to obtain different colors, the metal in the bucket being a mordant.

The fleece simmers in the dye bath for about an hour with the metallic salt and is then rinsed and dried.

After the dyes are set Love begins to weave, using a solid walnut loom dating from 1810. She received the loom as a gift 20 years ago in Marshall, Mo.

She spends as much as eight to 10 hours at a time weaving, but it takes an average of several hundred hours to finish a piece of art. She trades some of her woven blankets for various items, and she uses many of the others around the house.

"If someone wants to buy one, I would sell, but I use them more as art pieces or as exhibits," Love said.

Love prepares the fibers before running the yarn through the loom. Most of her weaving is done on an 175 year-old walnut loom she received as a gift 20 years ago.

In a small shed outside her home, Love spins wool fleece into yarn on a spinning wheel made in New Zealand.

don't see the need to bring them in or make changes.'

Sides are clearly drawn in the battle, pitting lawmakers from cities with regent universities against the Topeka legislative delegation and others looking to use the issue to further their political campaigns next fall.

House Speaker Mike Hayden, who does not hide his gubernatorial aspirations, has moved to the fore by suggesting a referendum to gauge how much Shawnee County residents want the state to absorb Washburn.

He has proposed a plan that would increase the local sales tax by onehalf cent in exchange for eliminating the 15 mill property tax Topekans now pay to generate $5.5 million annually to support the school.

The sales tax hike would generate about $7 million annually to be used exclusively to pay the bills at Washburn. In exchange, the state would take Washburn into the regents system, giving Kansas seven public, tax-funded universities.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents, said Wednesday the board might find Hayden's plan "palatable" if the sales tax funding was a permanent source. Otherwise, the regents stand by their original position that there's not enough money to adequately fund the existing state schools and adding a seventh is a bad idea and poorly timed.

The idea has grabbed the attention of those wanting to bring Washburn into the state system but the Special Committee on Washburn University, composed of Hayden and other legislative leaders, still does not seemed turned on enough to recommend the Legislature takeover the school. Sen. Joe Harder, R-Moundridge, is chairman of the special panel and a member of the educational planning committee. Harder said he believes there is not enough support for the Washburn proposal, which has been studied three times now in the past decade and rejected both of the previous times.

Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, said "it's time to fish or cut bait" and realize state finances "are looking bad" and there's not enough money to go around for Washburn.

The committee did not take any action Wednesday. It will mold its final recommendation on the subject at the November meeting, which may include advocating an increase in tuition aid in lieu of taking Washburn into the system.

The regents administer policy and budgets for the six state universities at Lawrence, Manhattan, Wichita, Pittsburg, Hays and Emporia, along with the Kansas Technical Institute in Salina.

prices as low as they are and wages under control, we are still going to see very moderate inflation for the next year."

Thomas, however, sees less "good news" for future inflation.

"Inflation's down but it's not out. One would be overconfident to say it's been licked. With the big deficits we've been having, one, two, or three years down the road we may see it rise very rapidly."

The inflation cycle is at its low point now, Thomas said, and it took some "lucky breaks" - one being the strong dollar - to bring inflation to its present low. But the dollar is again declining. If the trend continues, a greater demand for U.S. goods may result and therefore increase inflation - bad news for all age and tax brackets.

Cardinals top Royals, take 3-1 lead in Series

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS - John Tudor pitched a five-hitter and the St. Louis Cardinals showed unusual power, defeating the Kansas City Royals 3-0 Wednesday night to move within one victory of their second World Series championship in four years.

Tudor had the first World Series shutout since Scott McGregor of Baltimore beat the Philadelphia Phillies 5-0 in Game 5 of the 1983 classic.

The Cardinals, with an offense built on speed and line drives, scored two of their runs on solo homers by Tito Landrum, the substitute who is hitting .400 for the Series, and Willie McGee, the National League batting champion at .353.

Their third run was a more typical St. Louis effort, scoring on a triple by Terry Pendleton and a full-count suicide squeeze bunt by Tom Nieto.

The victory gave the Cardinals a 3-1 advantage in the best-of-seven Series and left the Royals in a hole from which only five other teams have recovered.

The Cardinals can wrap it up Thursday night, when they will send right-hander Bob Forsch, 9-6 against Royals left-hander Danny Jackson, 14-12.

The left-handed Tudor, 21-8 during the season and 3-1 in the post season, was virtually untouchable in his best post season outing of the year. He struck out eight, walked one and allowed four singles and a double.

He never really was in trouble until the seventh when the Royals loaded the bases with two out on a pair of singles and a walk.

But Tudor got out of it when pinchhitter Hal McRae swung on a pitch low and away and grounded into a forceout at third.

While the Cardinals' offensive effort resembled something less than all-out warfare, it was a marked contrast to the first three games, in which they batted .198 as a team with little run-scoring efficiency.

Landrum, filling in for injured rookie base-stealing star Vince Coleman, homered off Royals lefthander Bud Black in the second inning. McGee hit one off Black in the third, and the surprise squeeze came in the fifth as the Cardinals made the most of their opportunities.

If the Cardinals should go on to win the Series in five games, they would be the third consecutive team to do so. The Orioles won in five over Philadelphia in 1983, and Detroit did it to San Diego last year.

Brigham Young University won the eight-team University of Kansas Invitational women's golf tournament held Monday and Tuesday at the Alvamar golf course in Lawrence.

The K-State squad finished seventh. Susan Navrat was the leading competitor for the 'Cats, shooting scores of 86, 80 and 83 for a three-round total of 249.

Sharry Dercher had scores of 84, 84 and 85 for a three-round total of 253 to post K-State's second-best score. Paige Harrison had the third-best total, shooting three consecutive rounds of 86 for a score of 258.

Erin Andrew shot scores of 85, 87 and 92 for a three-round total of

Iowa State University finished second to Brigham Young, followed by the University of Missouri, KU's "A" squad, Wichita State University, KU's "B" squad, K-State and Southwest Missouri State

With an impressive showing in the Wisconsin Burger King Invitational Saturday, the K-State women's cross country team moved up to the No. 7 spot in the NCAA rankings this week.

"When you're seventh best in the nation in anything, it's sensational," Head Coach Steve Miller said. "It's both exhilarating and frustrating. It's exhilarating to know you're one of the top teams in the country. But it's also frustrating when we know we are better than what we've run."

Cats hope for return to glory days

By CLAUDIA SANGSTER Collegian Reporter

K-State Head Women's Basketball Coach Matilda Mossman is scared.

Mossman isn't scared of the competition but frightened rather at the magnitude of the 1985-86 squad. The team is one of quickness, depth, size and strength and one that will get the Wildcats back at the top of the Big Eight Conference.

"With the all the teams I've coached, I have never had this much quickness at each position," Mossman said. "Our quickness and depth is our strong suit, and we have to make that work to our advantage. We have a post (front court) player that can take the ball up as fast as our guards. That's scary." Mossman will be returning seven players from last year's 16-13 team. The Wildcats finished fifth in the conference and third at the Big Eight postseason tournament. Not since 1980 have the women finished lower than second in the conference tournament.

This year, however, the Wildcats are picked to battle for the conference title. That ranking magazine, which picked the Wildcats and the University of Oklahoma to battle for the title.

Returning from the 1984-85 squad will be guards Cassandra Jones, Leann Kuebelbeck and Susan Green; forwards Carlisa Thomas, Shelia Hubert and Cindy Durham; and center Sue Leiding.

A new face for the Wildcats will be center Amanda Holley, who came with Mossman from the University of Arkansas last year but was ineligible for action due to NCAA transfer rules.

Mossman has also added to her coaching staff. Eddie Vaughn has joined the staff along with secondyear Assistant Coach Margaret

"Eddie has been a big addition to our staff with his recruiting and on-court expertise," Mossman said. Since the Wildcats' official opening of practice on Oct. 15, Mossman has been introducing her defensive offensive and philosophies to the 13-member squad.

"At this point we are instituting our motion offense and our man-toman defense and the execution of our fast break. It is coming along slowly due to the new people, but staff are already seeing good things from the players. All-America candidate Jones is making her presence known early.

Jones has already received preseason honors by being named honorable mention All-American by Street and Smith magazine.

While Jones may have caught the media's eye, Thomas, a junior, has caught the eye of Mossman.

'The biggest thing we are seeing is Carlisa (Thomas)," Mossman said. "She's as good as she was last year, but now she is even stronger and better than a year ago. She has matured as a player, gotten herself in control and is working harder at the little things.'

Mossman has also noticed improvements in Leiding.

'She has improved her attitude and working habits. She is doing a better job of asking for the ball and once she gets it, converting to points," Mossman said.

The class of recruits that Mossman brings to K-State consists of guards Kim White, Theza Fitzpatrick and Cheryl Jackson; forward Tracey Bleczinski and center Stephanie Lane. The recruiting class is highlighted by Jackson, who has made the best progress of the group to date.

Jackson comes to K-State from Seward County Community College in Liberal. At the 1985 National Junior College Athletic Association All-Star game she was chosen as the most valuable player.

Jackson along with Fitzpatrick, a transfer from St. Louis Community College at Forest Park, may contribute immediately.

"Cheryl and Theza blend real well with our offensive and defensive scheme," she said. "They have the ability to lead the fast break.'

The Wildcats open the season by hosting the Little Apple Classic Nov. 22-23.

"I foresee us getting off to a slow start, due to our new players," Mossman said. "Once we get things down and once we can execute offensively and defensively we're gonna be ready to open up.

"We are going to be exciting because of our quickness. Right now, we are throwing the ball away because we're trying to make things happen too fast.

Volleyball team to face OU

By CLAUDIA SANGSTER Collegian Reporter

The second round of Big Eight Conference play will begin tonight for K-State's volleyball team as it takes on the University of Oklahoma.

The Wildcats opened the conference season against the Sooners Oct. 4 and lost a close fivegame match in Ahearn Field House. Winning in Norman on the Sooners' home court will be a tough assignment for the Wildcats, said Head Coach Scott Nelson.

"Losing in five games here was tough," Nelson said. "Attempting to upset OU there is even tougher.'

The first round of conference action ended with the Wildcats going 2-3. The wins came against Iowa State University and the University of Kansas. The three defeats came at the hands of the University of Nebraska, University of Missouri and the Sooners.

"At the end of the first round we came away with the feeling like there was only one team that played better than us and that was NU. We feel like we can compete and put ourselves in a position to beat everyone else," Nelson said.

Oklahoma is traditionally a team of power, size and aggressive net said. "We need a victory in order to play. The first match between the two teams showed another characteristic of the Sooners: tough defense.

"OU is a big team and can throw up a big block," Nelson said. "In our first match with them, they played outstanding defense in the back court. It was kind of the deciding factor in the match. They kept our offense stagnant."

Entering the second round of the conference, Nelson said, the Wildcats are much more confident about their play and success as a

"When we played OU the first time, it was our first Big Eight match," he said. "We seemed preoccupied with what adjustments we had to make. Now adjustments are more natural and we are able to concentrate on things to exploit the opposition.

'We are much better than we were, but I expect them to be better too."

The match is a critical one for both teams since they are fighting for a top-three finish in the conference

Following the match against the Sooners, K-State will travel to Tulsa, Okla., to participate in the Oral Roberts Invitational. There will be eight teams in the tournament, which is set up in pool play form.

There are two pools of four teams. Each pool has a round robin and the top three teams of each pool will advance to elimination play on

The teams in the Wildcats' pool are Oral Roberts University, Northeast Lousiana University and West Texas State University.

No pass, no play rule sidelines high school athletes across Texas

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON - There's not much doing Friday nights in Marathon. Texas, now that the high school football season has ended five weeks ahead of schedule.

Anthony refused on Wednesday to grant an injunction requested by attorney Anthony Sheppard that would have barred schools from enforcing the rule until the U.S. Supreme Court decides its constitutionality.

A challenge to the statute, which runs counter to Texans' obsession with high school football, is pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.

"It really hurts this town," said Gary Lamar, coach of the Marathon Mustangs, who lost all five games they had played this season. "This is a football town. That's all they have here."

The law, passed during a special legislative session last summer, bars students failing any course during a six-week grading period participating extracurricular activities for the next six weeks.

High School Marching Apache Band abandoned plans of marching during halftime after 26 of the 48 members failed at least one class.

"I had eight trumpet players before," band Director Don Patmon said. "I have one now."

The remaining 22 members, dubbed the "The A Team," now assemble in front of the drill team each game and play a single tune.

Statewide, the rule benched 15 percent of high school varsity football players, according to the Texas High School Coaches Association, the only group that monitors the failing rates of football players.

Failure rates were about 25 percent for junior varsity players and 38 percent for younger players, the association said.

State District Judge Marsha Anthony threw out the no pass, no play provisions during the summer, but her decision was overturned by the Texas Supreme

Anthony refused on Wednesday to grant an injunction requested by attorney Anthony Sheppard that would have barred schools from enforcing the rule until the U.S. Supreme Court decides its constitutionality. She set a Nov. 18 trial date to hear testimony on the merits of the case, which now is a class action suit involving Texas' 1,100 school districts. Sheppard contends the rule "impinges on the fundamental rights of students."

But Gov. Mark White, who appointed the panel that suggested the rule, said Texans should put academics before athletics.

Within the Houston Independent School District, Texas' largest, 637 of 2,771 athletes were removed from the rosters, including 416 of 1,371 sub-varsity football players. Already, four Houston schools have scrapped freshman football schedules.

In the San Antonio area, 790 athletes cannot play.

John Kincaide, athletic director for the Dallas Independent School District, said 123 of 765 varsity football players were declared ineligible.

Editor identifies with heraldry pastime

By LESLIE STOKES Collegian Reporter

In the age of knights in shining armor, tournaments and heraldry, a coat of arms was a means of identifying knights and their family name. Today, they are used to identify schools, fraternities, clubs and corporations as well as families.

Cy Wainscott, managing editor at University Relations, has created a coat of arms for numerous people in communications, including Tim Lindemuth, University Relations news editor; Jack Burke, head of the Department of Extension, Radio-Television and Film; and Lisa Carlin, a student employee at University Relations.

Creating coats of arms is a hobby Wainscott does free.

Wainscott became interested in heraldry - the identification by coats of arms - after reading a book about the legend of King Arthur. At the time, he was computerizing a newspaper in Cleveland, Ohio changing letterpress to video display terminals

Wainscott said computerizing a newspaper can be very impersonal and heraldry was a way to deal with impersonalization.

'My interest in heraldry was a nice counter. It's more personable, and people like to hear about their roots," Wainscott said.

heraldry began, warriors wore armor which covered their faces. Wainscott said the knights needed a way of recognition, so they began painting devices on flags and shields.

According to Wainscott, people adopted whatever designs pleased them. As the population grew and coats of arms became more popular, many were duplicated. To settle the argument of which coat of arms belonged to whom, the monarch, with the aid of his heralds - people who designed and identified coats of arms - granted the coat of arms exclusivly to a family.

To create a coat of arms, Wainscott begins by looking up the last name in a book of blazon, a language which describes the exact appearance of the coat of arms in one word.

Wainscott said the spelling of a last name can cause some difficulties. "In the 11th century, people couldn't read and write, so they would spell a last name in several different ways," Wainscott said.

Many coats of arms are a joining of two last names. For Lindemuth, the coat of arms is split, one side representing Linde which features a woman and the other side representing Muth, a bird.

"The symbols on the coat of arms are very simple," said Wainscott. A coat of arms for Oxford would be an ox crossing a stream - an ox fording a stream. "Arrows could simply mean the man liked archery," Wainscott said. 'People adopted whatever designs pleased them."

Wainscott said much of heraldry disappeared with the kings, but the countries of England and Scotland

According to literature on heraldry, there is no authority governing the use of coats of arms by Americans. "Very few people have a personal right to a coat of arms," Wainscott said. "Just because you are born with the same name as the coat of arms doesn't mean you are from the same family," he said. Yet, Wainscott said it's OK to display the arms of others, including those who share the same name and nationality. In the future, Wainscott would like to open a business for the designing and consulting of coats of arms. In addition, Wainscott is writing a book about the King Arthur legend. No completion date is set for the

Senate bans Jordan weapons sale until leaders establish peace talks

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Republicancontrolled Senate, moving to sidetrack President Reagan's unpopular $1.9 billion arms sale to Jordan, voted 97-1 Thursday to ban the deal until March 1 unless King Hussein begins "direct and meaningful" peace talks with the Israelis.

GOP leaders said Reagan agreed reluctantly to accept the restriction, and several senators said his only other alternative was to have his sale of sophisticated aircraft, air defense missiles and other weapons shot down altogether

But Hussein, speaking in an interview in Amman, said the Senate's action amounted to "reneging" by the United States. "One wouldn't like to use the word blackmail, but it's totally unacceptable. Obviously it's not a way to deal with problems among friends.

"I have made it abundantly clear to our friends in Washington that unless the agreement between us and the United States is implemented in the manner agreed upon...this (peace talks) is the last we would do to try to secure this particular package," Hussein said.

More than 70 senators had lined up to oppose the sale of F-20 or F-16 aircraft as well as other weapons, which Reagan proposed to bolster Jordan's own defenses and reward Hussein for his movement toward joining the Middle East peace process.

Opponents said Hussein should not receive U.S. arms as long as he was technically still in a state of war with Israel and until he sat down for direct peace talks with the Jewish state, but made clear at the same time they wanted to encourage the king's peace efforts.

The sale also has drawn the opposition of more than 270 House members, and legislation rejecting the sale was formally introduced in the House chamber a few hours before the Senate vote.

The measure approved overwhelmingly in the Senate was a hastily crafted attempt by GOP leaders to avert an outright major foreign policy defeat for Reagan at a sensitive time in the Middle East peace process, and less than a month before his summit with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., cast the sole vote against the measure, saying it did not go far enough because it did not guarantee opponents a vote any time before March 1 in case they want to block the sale permanently.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole of Kansas said the measure met "needs of all the parties" - including Reagan.

Search committee approves presidential job description

By TIM CARPENTER Editor

Presidential Search Committee members unanimously approved a presidential "position description" Thursday that could eliminate non-academic applicants having no doctorate or terminal degree.

The position description - which contains statements of qualifications and responsibilities of a K-State president as well as a description of the University — stated desirable candidates should "...possess scholarly academic credentials; an earned doctorate or appropriate terminal degree...'

The committee approved the document on a 5-0 vote because only five voting members were present. The document will be sent to the more than 40 nominees and applicants who have expressed interest in the presidency and as many as 120 university presidents, administrators and representatives of postsecondary education.

The stipulation that applicants should possess scholarly academic credentials may exclude Gov. John Carlin from the list of potential candidates. Since President Duane Acker, 54, announced June 27 that he will resign effective July 1, 1986, speculation has surfaced that Carlin, a 1962 K-State graduate with a bachelor of science degree, might be interested in succeeding Acker.

On July 14 Carlin confirmed that the presidency was among job possibilities he might consider when his term of office is up January 1987. Carlin said at the time he is "not closing the door on any option that might come up after my term ends."

However, Committee Chairman Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology, cautioned that the academic requirements must be viewed in the proper context.

"I think it means that anyone who doesn't have one of these two academic qualifications must be a super person to be considered," Frieman said.

Castle Crusade is not against the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum, however, the campus organization is in favor of planning the project properly, crusade members say.

A meeting Thursday in Bluemont Hall was designed to organize leaders of student clubs and organizations and to inform students of the coliseum.

Those in attendance were given fact sheets stating that the normal process "nas not been followed in developing the present projects and plans. We (Castle Crusade) feel the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum is not the facility originally presented to the student body and alumni when funding was Tony Rangel, vice president of Castle Crusade and senior in architecture, said, "Proper planning must be done through professional studies. They'll tell us what it takes to have a first-class coliseum."

Nine proper planning steps must be taken, said G.V. Salts, senior in architecture and design.

"These nine steps are the guidelines to every project we as architecture students do; they are the backbone of a project," Salts said. "Likewise, they should be the

President seeks peace effort

Reagan talks to U.N. leaders

By The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS - President Reagan, broadening the agenda for next month's Geneva summit, proposed before world leaders today that the United States and the Soviet Union undertake a regional peace process in five Moscow-backed countries "at war with their own people."

In remarks at the United Nations' 40th anniversary, with the Soviet foreign minister in the audience, Reagan moved to expand the Geneva discussions with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev beyond nuclear weapons. He called for a "fresh start" and "frank talk" that would substitute for anger and tension that have characterized U.S.-Soviet rela-

"Lives are being lost each day" because of Soviet expansion in those countries - Afghanistan, Cambodia, Ethiopia, Angola and Nicaragua, he charged. In each, he said, Marxism-Leninism is at "war with the people" and the conflict has spilled over into 'war with their neighbors.'

The president implied that curbing nuclear weapons through an accord with Moscow might depend on the outcome of such peacemaking efforts, saying, "Gaining a peaceful resolution of these conflicts will open whole new vistas for peace and pro-

Reagan, however, yielded nothing to Soviet insistence that he abandon his Strategic Defense Initiative to gain an arms control agreement. In fact, he quoted former Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin, who he said 18 years ago stressed the importance of just such a defensive system.

'Maybe an anti-missile system is more expensive than an offensive system," he quoted Kosygin as saying, "but it is designed not to kill people but to preserve human lives.

"We must begin somewhere," Reagan declared in an address before one of history's largest gatherings of heads of states, here to observe the 40th anniversary of the founding of the United Nations in an effort to put an end to war.

"Let us begin where there is great need and great hope," Reagan said, addressing his remarks to the Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze sat expressionless as Reagan spoke in the hall of the General Assembly. Reagan's speech was greeted with a polite, 45-second round of applause, but Sheverdnadze, as was true with many of those in the hall, did not join in.

Reagan said the United States seeks "real peace" and, to pursue it, he intends to make the resolution of regional conflicts in Africa, Asia and Central America a "central issue" at his summit meeting Nov. 19-20 with Gorbachev in Geneva, Switzerland.

"Yes," Reagan told the Soviets, "let us go to Geneva with both sides committed to dialogue. ...Let both sides go committed to walk together on a safer path into the 21st Century and to lay the foundation for enduring peace.'

The regional peace talks that Reagan proposed - his chief initiative in the speech - would be undertaken by the warring parties themselves, the president said.

Once such talks would "take hold," he said, the United States and the Soviet Union would together seek lasting solutions, including a halt to foreign military intervention, curbs on the flow of arms from outside and free elections.

In Afghanistan, Reagan said, the Soviet Union must be included in the

Weber bids necessitate refinancing

By MIKE ROBBINS Collegian Reporter

The Board of Regents' approval of a University request for additional funds for Weber Hall renovation will help make it possible to "maintain a total development project," said one building committee official

The University requested the money to help make up day-to-day equipment costs and fixtures needed for the Weber renovation, said Melvin Hunt, professor of animal sciences and industry and chairman of the departmental building committee

The lowest bid submitted for the Weber renovation was nearly $500,000 over the amount budgeted for the project, Hunt said.

"The $6.09 million that was the base bid is basically for bricks and mortar. It doesn't include some of the movable equipment needed to make the building operational," Hunt said. The University requested $422,000 to help cover the contingency costs of the project - the unforeseen costs as well as moveable equipment to assist in the construction of the pro-

"It is important to realize that they (regents) did not grant the funds. It must be approved by the Legislature," said Larry Garvin, director of facilities and planning.

The University has been meeting with the architect and contractor in charge of the renovation on a regular basis since the bids were taken Oct. 1. Garvin said. The purpose of the meetings is to work out a final project proposal.

"We are in the process of asking the general contractor for proposals - in other words, to quote us a price if certain changes are made in the plan of specification. We are talking about not taking things out, but we are working with the contractor to develop a less expensive way to do things.

Hunt said the architect, contractor and University are still negotiating to see if they can find enough items to revise in order to maintain a contingency fund for the project.

Hussein positive about peace offer

AMMAN, Jordan - King Hussein said Thursday he finds positive signs in peace proposals made by Shimon Peres, but the U.S. Congress can't coerce him into talking with the Israeli prime minister by delaying an arms sale.

Hussein commented at a palace news conference before spending four hours with President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt on their efforts to advance peace in the Middle East.

Mubarak told reporters in Cairo afterward that they discussed the Peres proposal, which includes an offer to meet Hussein in Amman. "It has some good points and some unsatisfactory ones," he said.

The king told reporters he saw "some positive development" in the Israeli prime minister's offer, made in a speech Monday to the U.N. General Assembly in New York.

Rioting moves into white districts

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Hundreds of rioters carried their rage against apartheid to the heart of white Cape Town on Thursday, smashing windows and overturning cars in a fashionable shopping street, witnesses reported.

Police headquarters in Pretoria said seven black and mixed-race people had been killed in townships around Cape Town and in other parts of the country.

Journalists on the scene said chaos reigned as police pursued the rioters beating rioters with rubber whips.

"Initially they beat everyone who was not white. Later, they beat everyone indiscriminately, even whites. If you were walking in a group, they beat you," one reporter said.

In Pretoria, President P.W. Botha announced that the state of emergency had been ended in six of the 36 black communities on which it was imposed July 21 because calm had been restored there.

Singer attempts to save lost voice

BERLIN - British pop singer Shirley Bassey left the stage in tears after losing her voice during a concert in West Berlin, and is undergoing treatment, a spokesman for her concert agency said Thursday.

Bassey hopes to continue a European tour with a show Friday night in Vienna, Austria, spokesman Klaus Roessler said.

The 48-year-old singer lost her voice after singing three songs at a sold-out concert in Berlin Tuesday evening. She came back an hour later but left the stage crying when her second attempt to continue the performance failed.

Company wants to develop site

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. - A development company represented by newsman Walter Cronkite has asked permission to add amusement rides, shops and a park to the downtown site of the 1982 World's Fair.

Riverfront Development Corp. is also proposing the construction of townhouses and a marina on the waterfront to the south, said Cronkite's partner, architect Robert Moon.

The proposal is still being fleshed out, Cronkite and Moon said Tuesday in a meeting with members of the city council and Knoxville Tomorrow Inc., the citizens group appointed to study proposals for

"It's not an overnight, magic wonderland kind of development,"

Two other companies also have shown interest in the area.

Cronkite, 68, is the former anchorman of the CBS Evening News and remains a special correspondent for the network.

Chemical may increase crop yields

WASHINGTON - An experimental chemical developed by Agriculture Department scientists shows promise of boosting the yields and protein content of farm crops, with the potential of easing world hunger.

Mixed with water and used as a spray, the chemical already has shown striking results. However, scientists said it needs further testing before general use can be considered.

The department's Agricultural Research Service said Wednesday in a report that the research was led by Dr. Henry Yokoyama, a chemist who works at the agency's fruit and vegetable chemistry laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.

Yokoyama reported that spraying crops with the chemical, known as a bioregulator, apparently prompts a plant's genes to increase yield, protein and other nutrients such as fats.

Yokoyama said the research was "very basic" and that "we do not understand exactly how the bioregulator works to produce the results" noted in the tests.

The chemical - called DCPTA from two commercially available compounds, 2-diethylaminoethylchloride and 3-4 dichlorophenol - apparently regulates the way genes act to increase the efficiency of a plant's photosynthesis, the process a plant uses to make food.

Yokoyama said the test results showed that protein content of soybeans increased by 68 percent after treatment with the chemical, fat content by 20 percent and yields by 35 percent.

UAW closer to contract agreement

DETROIT - Local leaders of the United Auto Workers endorsed a tentative contract with Chrysler Corp. on Thursday, taking the union a step closer to ending a $15 million-a-day strike by 70,000 Chrysler

The union's Chrysler Council approved the agreement overwhelmingly in a voice vote, said Robert Kinczowski, who represents Local 372 of Trenton, N.J., on the council.

"The report I get from my members is that they're ready to go back to work," Frank McKinnon, president of UAW Local 961 in Detroit, said earlier. "I would expect that the vote...would be upwards of 95 percent in favor."

Rank-and-file union members will vote on the pact over the weekend, with results expected to be announced Sunday evening.

Records reveal finalist's DUI arrest

TOPEKA - William H. Seiler, a McPherson attorney and one of three finalists for a vacancy on the Kansas Court of Appeals, was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol in his hometown in 1983, municipal court records show.

Seiler, 40, said Thursday he was arrested and, as a first-offender, was given the opportunity to enter a diversion agreement and seek treatment and counseling. In exchange, the arrest record was expunged and the case dismissed.

"It was an episode that occurred during a difficult period in my own personal life," Seiler said in a telephone interview. "It is not reflective of my own professional qualifications for that job."

Proposal induces mixed reactions

TOPEKA - House Speaker Mike Hayden's new proposal to bring Washburn University of Topeka under state control drew a mixed reaction Thursday from Gov. John Carlin, who said he favors alternative sources of revenue for Washburn but remains opposed to its admission as a state school.

The proposal, which Hayden, R-Atwood, unveiled last week, calls for Shawnee County residents to vote on whether they want the municipal university to be governed by the State Board of Regents and whether they are willing to pay an extra one-half cent sales tax to support the school.

Hayden's plan calls for Washburn to join the state system on July 1, 1987 in return for the sales tax revenue. It would be the first expansion of the state university system since Wichita State University came under the regents' control in 1964.

However, the Democratic governor said his position against Washburn's admission as a state school remains unchanged.

Rebels relinquish Duarte's daughter

By The Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador -President Jose Napoleon Duarte's daughter was freed by her guerrilla kidnappers Thursday in the first part of an exchange for 118 jailed and wounded rebels and political prisoners, the president's chief adviser said.

The government freed 22 political prisoners, who left Mariona prison on a bus, newsmen and the rebels' Radio Venceremos said.

A group of wounded guerrillas who were being given safe conduct out of the country were en route to San Salvador, a civilian source in the eastern province of Usulutan said.

"She was freed," the presidential adviser, Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, told reporters about Duarte's daughter, Ines Guadalupe Duarte Duran, 35.

Duarte Duran and a friend who was kidnapped with her as they arrived for class at a private college Sept. 10 were flown by helicopter from the rebel-held mountain village where they were freed to a military school in San Salvador. Duarte and dozens of reporters greeted the civilian helicopter carrying Duarte Duran and Ana Cecilia Villeda Sosa, 23, when it landed at the military school at 2:06 p.m.

There was no immediate word on the release of small-town mayors and municipal officials who were taken in a series of kidnappings that began last spring and also were part of the exchange agreement.

Tenancingo, 24 miles northeast of the were involved in the swap.

Traveling with Monsignor Arturo Rivera y Damas, archbishop of San Salvador, the two women reached Santa Cruz Michapa, 18 miles from the capital. The helicopter's departure to San Salvador was then delayed by weather.

Eighteen of the 22 released prisoners arrived in Tenancingo, according to reporters who followed the bus but were stopped by rebels before they reached the town. The other four were believed to be leaving the country.

The radio said government troops and guerrillas moving in advance of the wounded rebels being taken to San Salvador clashed late Wednesday near Jucuaran, 80 miles southeast of the capital, but the wounded were not affected.

Rey Prendes said the exchange operation began Thursday at 7 a.m. with representatives of the Roman Catholic Church, International Red Cross and the diplomatic corps participating.

Under the exchange agreement, reached after three days of negotiations in Panama, the government was to release the 22 jailed rebels and allow 96 wounded guerrillas to be evacuated. The rebels were to free 38 kidnapped small-town mayors and other municipal officials. Earlier, had Rey Prendes said she arrived in officials said 33 kidnapped officials

Housing Council passes rate increase

By The Collegian Staff

In a unanimous vote Thursday, the Housing Council approved a proposed budget for fiscal 1987 which would increase resident rates by $20 a semester.

The proposed budget requires approval by the Kansas Board of Regents. The regents will vote on the budget in December.

The 2 percent rate increase is "the most modest increase we felt we could get by with," said Tom Frith, director of the Department

"I make no apologies to anyone for the fact that we need to raise housing rates," Frith said. He added the increase is half of the current inflation rate of 4 percent.

"If the state dictates that employees' salaries go up, if our food costs go up, if the cost of utilities goes up, there's no way to get that money without raising the rate," Frith said.

If the regents approve the budget, rates for residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments will increase 3 percent. The rates for graduate student housing in Evans Apartments would also increase.

Plans for residence hall improvements include installing smoke detectors in each room. If a fire starts in one of the rooms, an alarm will sound in that room with warning sounds in the rest of the rooms on the wing.

Placing detectors in individual rooms is intended to prevent false alarms while still giving warning to evacuate a wing in case of a real emergency, said William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services. The need for smoke alarms was demonstrated by two incidents during the summer of a room catching on fire

The housing department is also in the process of buying push-button telephones for rooms.

The phones will save the department money because the University will own the phones and won't have to rent them from telephone companies, Frith said.

Army should compromise

Civil liberties vs. public health is fast becoming the newest and most complex conflict those concerned with social progress must resolve. The increase in the number of persons afflicted with herpes and acquired immune deficiency syndrome is forcing the issue — an issue that has no simple solutions.

Last year, Emporia residents were forced to face the issue when a 6-year-old infected with the herpes virus during birth entered the public school system. Overreactive parents, terrified the disease might spread to their own children, told their children not to touch or play with the infected child. Certainly, other children must be protected from the disease, but how can the afflicted child mature with a normal, healthy self image under such circumstances?

Recently, U.S. military officials announced they will test all personnel for the AIDS virus.

Civil libertarians are worried and they have reason to be. AIDS is not a homosexual disease, the Center for Disease Control has ruled, and yet the suspicion is still there - those with the AIDS virus may be gay.

The military has a blatant history of discriminating against homosexuals. With the AIDS test, their discrimination may extend to all who routinely test positive for the virus and may indeed help the military to focus on certain individuals to uncover evidence of homosexuality.

The military's reasoning for testing, on the other hand, is quite sound.

It has been proved that prostitutes are a source of AIDS infection. The high percentage of young men in the military makes the military population especially vulnerable to infection through this route. In combat situations, there is a high risk that troops will spread the virus through blood donations to injured troops.

Too often civil liberties issues force people to faction into "yes" and "no" groups. Factionalism, in this case, could be devastating. If the "yes" group wins, many could receive years of unfair treatment and psychological abuse in the military. If the "no" group wins, unnecessary deaths may occur.

Clearly, neither group should "win." The solution calls for the utmost in rational compromise, one which guarantees a fair hearing for anyone who suspects discrimination and which guarantees as much medical confidentiality as possible.

Treatment for alcoholism includes family

Because this week is Alcohol Awareness Week, I would like to share some things I have had the opportunity to learn and experience as one growing up with and recovering from an alcoholic family. Being a child, sibling, niece, cousin and friend of several alcoholics, my life has been centered around a drug and the behaviors that coincide with that drug.

Editorial

How does a world centered around alcohol affect a person? Many spend a lot of time wondering why their lives and their problems seem so much more out of control than those of their peers. They believe they make more mistakes than any normal person, and worse - they don't learn from their mistakes. They bury themselves in them. Many never know where they are going but are sure to get there fast. They hurry so much they miss everything.

Their goals are to impress other people, please other people and be everything everyone else wants them to be. They want to be liked by everyone. Rejection and abandonment are devastating to them. They are constantly seeking approval and affirmation and want immediate gratification. They have an overdeveloped sense of responsibility and prefer to be concerned with others rather than themselves. They are second to everyone else. Their lives become a delusion; a false mental conception resistant to reason. They have nothing to grasp onto and no way of knowing how to feel or how to be real.

These characteristics are only a few of the common traits that become a way of life for someone living in a world surrounded by alcohol and other drugs. Those suffering from these traits are known as "coalcoholics" - those who take on the characteristics of alcoholism without necessarily ever taking a drink.

ALICIA STEIN Guest Columnist

"Co-alcoholics" are also known as "codependents." Co-dependency is learned by family members of a chemically dependent person in order to survive the emotional pain and stress of the situation. These behaviors can be passed down from generation to generation even after the dependent person is deceased or recovered.

Many co-dependents become perfectionists, workaholics, compulsive eaters, compulsive gamblers or they become dependent on relationships, prestige, power and control. These behaviors often cause problems with family members, friends, employers, co-workers and spouses. The codependent has a compulsion for more, an anxious feeling of incompleteness and emptiness despite accomplishments.

Co-dependents often suffer physically as well as mentally. Many experience migraine headaches, colitis, ulcers, high blood pressure, depression, anxiety, insomnia, hyperactivity and other stress-related illnesses. Thus, alcoholism is, and should be treated as, a family disease.

Recently, I had the opportunity, as a family member, to experience the treatment. My mother, with five years of sobriety, went through treatment just two months ago. Her five years of sobriety were good, but they cannot even compare to how much better things are now that she the disease of understands alcoholism/chemical dependency and the effects it has on others.

Our family attended a week of all-day group therapy sessions known as family week. During this time we had the opportunity to learn to recognize the effects of alcoholism on us as family members and we began to identify areas in our own lives that needed changing. We learned we have the power to be who we want to be and the choice to change in order to make our own lives more manageable. We have learned how to deal with pain and how to cope with life in a healthy way.

I had the opportunity to go through a second family week last month with my brother who was treated for co-dependency.

These past few months have given me and my family a different outlook on life, one that is not quite so rigid and negative. We have been given the chance to start over again and live as happily and normally as we allow ourselves to live.

We have learned to only be responsible for our own attitudes and behaviors and to confront family members when inappropriate behaviors and attitudes are expressed. Our resentments have changed to understanding, our tears have become smiles, our shame has turned to pride and our fears have been replaced by family trust.

My life is still centered around drugs and alcohol - treatment does not provide an instant cure. However, there is a big difference between the person I was four months ago and the person I am today. I have control over my life and know who I am. I have begun to apply what I have learned by making the best of what could be a dysfunctional way of life.

Editor's note: Alicia Stein is a junior in elementary education.

Administrators fail again

The University administrative leadership, or lack thereof, has caused far more disrepute to the University than the football

Competent planning once again has surfaced as the nemesis of the administration. The current problem hauntingly resembles the fiasco of the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum, but this time it's the renovation of Weber Hall.

Bids for Weber renovation came in nearly half a million dollars above the project budget.

The big excuse this time is necessary construction for the meat laboratory in Weber. To meet U.S. Department of Agriculture regulations, the meat lab was in dire need of renovation to maintain both the prestige of the animal science program and the quality of education at the University.

One can't quarrel with that logic.

Unfortunately, logic did not guide the budget makers they purposely unless understated the budget to ensure passage of the proposed construc-

Granted, "no architect in the state of Kansas" has ever before estimated the cost of building a meat lab, but the architect chosen by the administration should have had the experiece and skill to handle such a project. If not, perhaps the administration should have consulted the professionals in the College of Architecture.

Department building planners are currently examining areas to trim costs of the project. As of yet, they have not stooped to the level of the coliseum planners by deleting improvements or cutting the size of the project. They are, however, working with the contractor to find less expensive means of construction.

The University has seen a large turnover in leadership during the past couple of years and it is possible the mistakes of the past are just now becoming apparent. But it is equally possible the new administrators are failing to show the capabilities for which they were hired.

Reagan seeks unity among Republicans

On Tuesday, it was a 4,500-mile round-trip to Boise, Idaho, and Milwaukee, Wis., to raise campaign funds for two Republican senators facing re-election in 1986. On Wednesday, it was a tete-a-tete in the Oval Office which helped persuade a reluctant former Vermont Gov. Richard Snelling to run against Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., next year. On Thursday, it was a fund-raising dinner for the Republican Governors Association, the opening gun in a concerted drive to improve the GOP's strength.

In these and other less-publicized ways last week, President Reagan went about fulfilling his role as the day-in, day-out leader of the Republican Party. As one who often has been critical of other aspects of Reagan's stewardship, I want to salute the man who, more than any other president I have ever covered, pays his dues and unselfishly aids the growth of his political party.

Reagan consistently has soldiered away for the Republican Party, in good times and bad. As Rhodes Cook of Congressional Quarterly pointed out, about the last thing Reagan did before he went in for his cancer surgery last summer was to tape a television ad for the GOP candidate in a Texas special election. One of the first things he did when he got out was to speak at a California Republican fund-raiser.

Edward J. Rollins, who left recently as White House political director, said Reagan made more than two dozen campaign and fund-raising appearances for the party and its candidates in 1983-84.

So far this year, he has done events for all four major national Republican committees (Senate, House, Governors and National Committee), for six senators with 1986 races and for both states with 1985 gubernatorial

What drives the president to this selfappointed task? The answer from former press secretary Lyn Nofziger and from almost everyone else who has known Reagan over the years is that when he chose the Republican Party, after spending his first 50 years of life with the opposition, he signed an oath in blood.

"He really believes in the Party," Nofziger said, "and he wants to see it succeed. Long before anyone approached him about being a candidate himself, he was doing party chores, and he just never has stopped.

As long as he has been active in the GOP, Reagan has preached the importance of party unity, and he practices it in his own political work. Of all the Republican senators running for re-election in 1986, the first to ask for and get a Reagan endorsement tape for radio and TV use was Bob Packwood of Oregon, perhaps Reagan's most caustic Republican critic during the first term.

United Feature Syndicate

Reagan had no more difficulty finding areas of agreement to emphasize in plugging for maverick Packwood's re-election than he did in finding common ground last Tuesday with such staunch conservatives as Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, and Robert Kasten, Reagan has provided entree for other GOP candidates to constituencies that had been strongly Democratic before 1980: Southerners, evangelicals, blue-collar skilled workers, pink-collar office workers and, most important for the future, young people and first-time voters.

He has added both muscle and definition to the Republican Party as an entity in the public consciousness. As Secretary of Labor Bill Brock, a former Republican national chairman, commented last week, "We have a strong leader and a clear sense of direction, and the Democrats have neither."

The Republicans have a president who really works at politics. And it makes a

Arab nations should provide Palestinian homeland

I realize that my coming from a Jewish backround makes it as difficult for me to appreciate the Palestinians' perspective as it does for them to appreciate mine. Many wrongs have been committed by both in the name of survival.

I agree that the Palestinians should have a homeland of their own, just as the Jewish people have Israel. But I don't understand why (except for perpetuation of historical grudges) the Palestinian people see Israel as the only wrongdoer.

Israel is such a tiny country while its neighbors are large and numerous. Why do you not hold these Arabic governments equally responsible for the lack of a Palestinian homeland? After all, culturally, the Palestinians have more in common with the other Arabs than with the Israelis. Giving them a homeland within one of these larger, richer, less densely populated and culturally similar countries seems a far more logical solution than giving them a homeland within

Though there may be disagreement as to who has a right to live in Israel and who has committed more wrongs, it is a matter of public record that the Palestine Liberation Organization has stated numerous times that it will not rest until Israel has been pushed into the sea. ### Castle Crusade pans coliseum 'best guess'

State park subject of ownership debate

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A dam that holds no water is not a lake, according to the heir of a Colorado cattle company who wants to reclaim the title to 790 acres of property donated to the state in 1934 to establish a Finney County State Park.

The state supreme court was asked Thursday to overturn a Finney County District Court ruling which barred Roger C. Kinney from taking title to the land, which is supposed to include a 150-acre lake in the southwest part of the state.

Kinney is a descendant of stockholders of a dissolved Colorado cattle company of the same name which originally donated the land.

"There are two main questions here: did the state have a duty to maintain the lake and was it maintianed," said Phyllis F. Wendler in Kinney's behalf during oral arguments before the sevenmember high court.

She disagreed with the Finney County District Court decision which, in essence, said a lake does not have to contain water to retain its classification. And several of the justices seemed to agree. "How do you use and maintain something as a fish preserve if you don't have any water?" asked Justice Richard W. Holmes. "I don't

How do you use and maintain something as a fish preserve if you don't have any water? I don't imagine the fishing is very good.'

imagine the fishing is very good." Justice Kay McFarland took issue with the Kansas Fish and Game Commission calling it a game preserve when Bruce Miller, the state' attorney, said hunting of ringneck pheasants and deer is allowed.

"Is that what you call a wildlife preserve, a place where hunting is allowed?" she asked.

Miller, a deputy attorney general, defended the fish and game commission's maintenance of the park, saying the terms of the agreement had been met.

'This is a county park and most of it has been declared a wildlife managment area," Miller said. "There are roads, a dam and it has been maintained by fish and game under the conditions it was donated to the state."

He said the Civilian Conservation

Corps built the dam during the Great Depression and it's large enough to hold 325 acres of water - twice the agreement requires. And Miller said the lake became a good fishing spot for two decades.

However, during the late 1960s it began to dry up, as did a 150-mile stretch of the Arkansas River from Garden City to Great Bend along with many streams and lakes in western Kansas.

"We built a dam and it did fill up," Miller said. "It was used by fishermen and was even drained a couple times to clean it out. But they started building watersheds around it and things started drying up.

"From our viewpoint, whether there is water in it or not is immaterial. As long as it's maintained as a dam we've met our obligation."

The state acquired the property to use as a conservation and recreation area and the deed required that a lake of at least 150 acres be constructed and maintained on the land. If that provision was not met, the lake propety was to revert to the heirs of the former owners, Kinney

He sued to gain title because the lake dried up and has not held water for at least 25 years, with the exception of small amounts of excess water between 1967-70.

About 90 acres of brush now covers the lake bed and Kinney said the state's failure to maintain the lake should result in the land reverting to

Miller said the lower court only ruled on one portion of the case whether a lake must actually contain water to retain that classification which it settled in the state's favor.

He said it was inappropriate to argue before the supreme court any question of maintenance of the total park or use as a game preserve because the lower court never addressed it.

The high court took the case under advisement and is expected to hand down its decision Dec. 6.

Signing class helps relations with deaf

By BRENDA KITCHEN Collegian Reporter

For Andy McDavitt, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, Moore Hall is a quiet place to relax and study. He is deaf.

McDavitt has been deaf for 13 years. He lost his hearing at the age 5 due to spinal meningitis. Although he is proficient in lip reading and verbal expression and has always attended public schools, communication is sometimes difficult.

At times it is challenging for people to communicate with him, but all that may change. Moore Hall residents are participating in a sign language class to facilitate communication with the deaf.

Calypso artist John Bayley offers taste of island music

By BOB SCHEIBLER Collegian Reporter

Rhythms of the islands won out over Royals baseball for approximately 150 people Thursday night. John Bayley brought his personal style of calypso and reggae to the K-State Union Catskeller.

"I flew in from Florida for the last night of my tour and after tonight I am going home to take a vacation," Bayley said.

The concert was competing for an audience with several events on campus - the marching band concert and the Jeff Duncan solo dance concert - and the world

"(Bayley) told me before the concert that no matter how many people that we had we were going to party," said Susan Bender, graduate in journalism and mass communications and Union program adviser.

Bayley performs solo, accompanying himself on the guitar, and entertains the audience not only with his music, but with his enthusiastic attitude. "I've been away too long," Bayley said as the crowd applauded.

This was the second time Bayley has appeared at K-State. The last time was two years ago and that concert was also held in the Cat-

"Music is a wonderful thing. It has a way of changing people's whole perspective," Bayley said.

The Catskeller took on an air of the islands with palm tree posters and straw hats. Several couples took to the dance floor as Bayley filled the room with a strong reggae beat.

"My mom wanted me to be a brain surgeon," Bayley said. "Parents have the most impossible dreams. Can you see me as a brain surgeon?"

"I have had a lot of fun planning this concert. John is a great guy. If I didn't plan on graduating I would follow him back to the island to be his road man," said Jeff Miller, senior in electrical engineering.

By LINDA SCHMIDT

Arts and Entertainment Editor

During the '84-'85 school year associate art professor Gary Woodward traded coffee breaks for tea time, chatted instead of talked and became nackered in place of tiring. He explored England as a visiting faculty member.

Woodward was one of 108 recipients of the Fulbright Teacher Exchange Program, a national organization. After application and a regional interview, he was chosen to teach in Manchester, England, a city of 3 million.

'When a person takes a year away it's a textbook reason to do it, to be refreshed, experience something different than you're job here," Woodward said. "And because of the particular staff I was lucky enough to have, it worked."

In August 1984, Woodward "literally packed two suitcases" and traded homes with an English art professor who in return taught at the Universi-

Located in northern England. Manchester Polytechnic is considered a large university by British standards. With 13,000 students, mainly from England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, the competition to be accepted by the university is 'incredibly fierce," Woodward said.

An individual wishing to attend a certain university first submits a portfolio to the school and then waits to be asked to an interview. If approved after the interview, the student is accepted.

For instance, more than 19,000 individuals applied for 5000 openings at Polytechnic, Woodward said. Another school offering 12 spots, attracted 450 applicants.

"It's so different than our whole concept," Woodward said. "If they don't get a spot in England (schools), they're very desparate." Unaccepted persons go on something comparable to welfare in the United States, however, there is no stigma attached, he said.

An English school year runs from September to July, with the 11 months broken up into three terms. Because of the great amount of competition, certain schools have designed a foundations course that better prepares the student. Woodward team-taught such a course.

"I taught them how to compete and get a place in the university," Woodward said, "how to get their art portfolios together so they can compete."

Team-teaching was a new concept to Woodward, he said.

Woodward said he taught a lot more students in England because there were nine full-time faculty members there compared to 23 fulltime members at the University. The number of students in art is quite similar, he said.

Attitudes toward art and the "supreme kind of position," given to creativity was tremendous, Woodward said.

Department promotes arts by forming troupe

By LEANNE STOWE Staff Writer

Efforts by three departments to recruit students and promote the University will result in the College of Arts and Sciences having its own rendition of a traveling vaudeville

A committee of students in music, dance and theater made a proposal to students in the three departments to put together a traveling show and visit high schools and junior colleges to promote the University and their departments, said Don Smith, assistant to the dean of arts and sciences.

The purpose of the "Kansas State Performing Arts Troupe" is to develop two or three separate 30- to 50-minute programs which fuse dance, music and theater pieces and involve six to 12 students, Smith said.

The idea is to market the troupe and the programs in the departments and through a flyer mailed to such groups and organizations as shoppand arts organizations, community colleges and high schools.

Smith said the troupe is a response to the need for awareness of the departments of dance, music and theater.

According to the proposal, the KSPAT would be student-run from start to finish, but organizers are hoping to get support from the College of Arts and Sciences, said Dennis Good, graduate in theater and member of the committee. He said in the future the committee would like to see support from the University in the form of a floating scholarship - a scholarship that can "float" from department to department each year - through the three departments and academic credit. "It will take a lot of cooperation between the three departments before this thing gets off its feet, but when it does it will be great for the University," Good said. The group has tentatively set auditions for Dec. 9, 10 and 11 in Nichols time Tony Award winner who is known for composing clever lyrics and innovative, dramatic music. Many of the songs are short stories set to

KC stays alive with 6-1 win

By The Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — The Kansas City speed connection of Lonnie Smith and Willie Wilson came alive Thursday night, leading the Royals to a 6-1 victory over St. Louis in Game 5 of the World Series and signaling that time had not yet run out for the American League champions.

Their backs had been to the wall for so long they had written graffiti on it, Hal McRae had said. On this night, the graffiti read: "Not just yet"

The victory cut the Cardinals' advantage in the best-of-seven Series to three games to two heading back to Kansas City for Game 6 Saturday night.

The Royals will send left-hander

Charlie Leibrandt, the hard-luck loser of Game 2, against Cardinals right-hander Danny Cox, who won Game 2 with the aid of four ninthinning runs.

With Danny Jackson pitching in and out of trouble despite allowing only five hits and striking out five, the Nos. 1 and 2 hitters for the Royals suddenly sparked a dormant Kansas City offense. Smith had two hits and scored a pair of runs, and Wilson had two hits, including a triple, and a pair of RBIs.

The Cardinals, meanwhile, seemed more like the team showing pressure. Slick-fielding shortstop Ozzie Smith made an error that led to a run, and fan favorite Tito Landrum had a rough day. Landrum let runners move up to second and third on a flyout in the first, leading to one run; misplaying a fly ball into a double, leading to the game-winning run in the second; and letting another ball go over his head in the ninth for an RBI double.

The Royals scored once in the first inning against Bob Forsch and added three more in the second, beginning with the first controversial call of the Series in a disputed play at home plate argued vehemently between Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog and umpire John Shulock.

Still left for the Royals is an unenviable task. They had fallen behind 3-1 in the Series Wednesday night when they were shut out 3-0 by John Tudor. Of 34 previous teams to face such a deficit, only four had gone on

Session helps residents in understanding laws

By SUE DAWSON Staff Writer

In an effort to educate Manhattan area residents on recent legislation regarding property reappraisal and a referendum vote, the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry presented a workshop Tuesday afternoon at the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce office, 505 Poyntz Ave.

To avoid possible court-ordered reappraisal, the Kansas Legislature has approved a bill ordering reappraisal for all property in the state by January 1989.

Also approved during the legislative session was a resolution calling for a November 1986 referendum on a proposed constitutional amendment for classifying property and appraising property at different percentages, depending on its usage and value.

At the meeting, most participants said there was a need to educate the public on the issue.

'I think people are going to need a lot of education on this before this thing stands much hope of passing,' said Ed Bruske, KCCI president.

Rep. Joe Knopp, R-Manhattan, said the classification system, a system for assessing different types of property at different percentages of fair market value, could aid the city and its businesses.

But Knopp, agreeing with Bruske, said if the amendment is not wellunderstood by the public, it would not "Presentation is extremely important," he said. "It all depends on how people view things as being impor-

With the current concerns of the unstable farm economy, the value of land devoted to agriculture is to be based on its "use value," or ability to produce income.

"Farms are a special case," said David Litwin, KCCI's director of taxation. "The proposal would substitute what's called 'use value' for farms. What that means is that you don't worry too much about the actual fair market value or selling price of the farm. Instead, you concentrate on how much income you can generate in its farm use."

Litwin said if the farm economy improves, farmers' tax rates would

Since the last reappraisal 15 years ago, valuations on property have not been kept up-to-date, resulting in wide disparities from county to county or even within the same county, violating a state Constitutional requirement for uniform and equal tax-

One proposed alternative, "classification," is designed to keep the ratio of taxation among residential, commercial and agricultural property near present levels.

Currently, the Kansas Constitution requires all property to be valued at 30 percent of fair market value, but most isn't. Under the amendment, residential property would be valued at 12 percent of market value, while agricultural land would be valued at 30 percent of its use value.

If the classification proposal fails, the reappraisal process will continue. If the Legislature takes no other action, the new valuations will apply to the payment of property taxes in 1989, with all property assessed at 30 percent of market

Nancy Twiss, a pre-law adviser in the College of Arts and Sciences said, 'The outlook for future employment for lawyers is optimistic. Because of increasing federal regulations, society is having increasingly more suits brought to court."

During discussion of the importance of academic credentials, committee member Charles Reagan, professor of philosophy and Faculty Senate president said, "I can't imagine us considering a person who had not stepped foot on a campus after getting a bachelor's degree.'

Carlin, who does not have an advanced degree, served eight years in the Kansas House of Representatives before being elected to his first fouryear term as governor in 1978 and winning re-election in 1982. He is ineligible under the state Constitution for re-election to a third term.

Carlin, 45, could not be reached Thursday for comment on the committee's action.

His speech recalled that the United Nations was founded as a "guiding star" to freedom. "Dreams of trust are worthy," the president said, "but in these 40 years, too many dreams have been shattered, too many promises have been broken, too many lives have been lost."

In addition to having a doctorate or terminal degree, the document indicates that candidates for the presidency should have an understanding of a comprehensive University with a land-grant tradition; appreciate the importance of research and scholarship; and be able to effectively communicate with University constituents.

The position paper also said candidates need extensive administrative experience and be able to articulate a strategic long-range plan for the University.

The 15-member committee is scheduled to meet Nov. 5 to discuss a list of criteria for evaluating candidates' resumes. The committee will begin screening applicants Dec. 1 and must submit a list of three to five candidates to the regents by April 1. The regents will make the final decision.

"I am confident that we will be able to reward the contract within a week to 10 days," Garvin said. "Actually the bids were taken Oct. 1, but we have 45 days to award the contract and I am confident we will be able to do that."

Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents, told board members Oct. 18, "We put together a good construction guess, but we didn't have much experience with meat labs. We have never bid one before - no architect in the state of Kansas has."

The renovation of Weber Hall will primarily be an interior renovation, but will also involve new construction, Hunt said.

Hunt said departmental offices will still remain, but classrooms and laboratories will totally change in function.

"There will be a major change in the non-office portion of the project. Some of it will be classrooms, some of it will be student study areas, computer areas, audio-tutorial areas as well as some graduate assistant offices. There will also be additional research space," Hunt said.

Most of the reseach space and laboratories will be in the new addition. About 23,000 feet of usable space will be added to Weber when the project is complete.

One of the most expensive additions to the Weber project is a new USDA-inspected meat laboratory, Hunt said.

"To my knowledge there has not been a state laboratory built like this for 20 to 30 years. This project was a little harder to bid because of the complexity of the space and the strict requirements demanded for such a laboratory.'

Hunt said work could begin this fall. The project is designed for renovation to occur in winter. The renovation is expected to be complete by fall 1987.

backbone of the proposed coliseum." Salts said the first step is developing a master plan study, which determines the short- and long-range goals. Such goals include location of the coliseum and adequate surrounding visitor housing accommodations. The needs and project size must then be determined through a market study.

Salts said such considerations in this area include the number of alumni and student season ticket holders and their places of residence. Also, such free-time activities as concerts should be considered.

Another proper planning step is a financial/feasibility study, Salts

"Operating costs are a big issue," Salt said. "Can the project pay for

Other studies Castle Crusade believes are essential in planning include studies on site selection and traffic. These studies would examine subjects such as soil compaction, flow of traffic and parking needs. Also, spacial needs of those using the facility (locker rooms, for example) and a funding study are included in the nine steps, Salt said. Design and construction steps then follow. Rangel encouraged those in attendance to take action if interested in ensuring proper steps are taken in planning the coliseum. Such actions include expressing an interest to Student Senators to form a bill to postpone student funding until professional studies are done and writing the Kansas Board of Regents with concerns.

'The regents are showing a lot of hesitation with the coliseum project. It's time for the students to stand up and be heard," Rangel said.

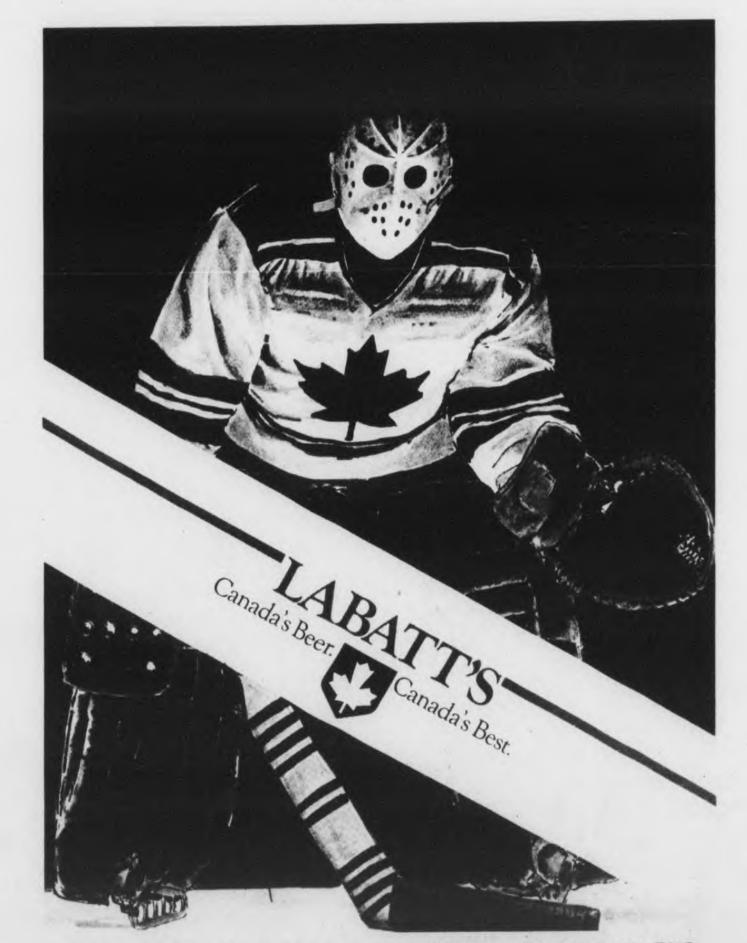

Those attending the meeting were encouraged to pose questions to John G. Montgmery, a regents member who is visiting campus Thursday to address students about the coliseum issue. The address will be at noon in the Union Courtyard.

"We need to show we're part of an ongoing tradition of students and show our pride in Kansas State," Rangel said. "If we come out with a first-class coliseum, we'll look really good. Students can do a lot."

Royals win Series, 11-0

By TODD NIGHSWONGER Sports Editor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The Kansas City Royals. Call them what you want.

Call them a team of destiny. Call them the Remarkable Royals. Call them the American League Champions.

And now, call them the World Champions in baseball.

Yes, the Royals are the best in baseball and did it in convincing fashion in game seven of the 1985 World Series Sunday night with an 11-0 whitewash of the National League Champion St. Louis Car-

"You just never know what's going to happen," Royals manager Dick Howser said. "I was surprised it was a blowout game."

Platoon rightfielder Darryl Motley got the ball rolling for Kansas City in the bottom of the second inning by smacking a 3-2 pitch into the left field seats with Steve Balboni aboard to stake the Royals to a 2-0 lead. Just moments before, Motley hit a pitch to deep left that drifted foul.

"I knew it was going to stay fair when I hit it," Motley said of the home-run swing. "It's a good feeling and something I've always dreamed

Motley's homer came off Cardinals' starting pitcher John Tudor, who was behind in the count to several Royals hitters in the early

Kansas City added three runs in the third and exploded for six runs in the fifth, sending 11 batters to the plate. The Cardinals used five pitchers in the inning, tying a World Series record for pitchers used by one team in an inning

But, it was two St. Louis pitchers, along with St. Louis manager Whitey Herzog, that almost stole the show from Kansas City's offensive outburst in the game.

First, Tudor was pulled from the game before he could get two outs in the third inning and was charged with the first five runs. Tudor, in frustration, struck an electric fan in the Cardinals dugout, cutting his pitching hand. He was taken to a local hospital where he received stitches in his left index finger.

"John was upset. He knew he couldn't make a pitch for us," Her-

'The season boiled down to one ballgame," Tudor said later, "and it was a mess. It's going to take awhile

Rioters vow to avenge students' deaths

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines - About 7,000 farmers and students vowing to avenge the police killing of two student protesters marched Sunday on dent Ferdinand E. Marcos, but riot troops blocked them several hundred yards away.

"Blood for blood ... a life for a life, that is a promise," the marchers chanted before setting fire to effigies of Marcos and Uncle Sam. They were accompanied by a jeep carrying the flag-draped coffin of 17-year-old Emmanuel Lazo, a student killed Oct. 21 when police fired on rock-throwing demonstrators at a city intersection.

Another student, Danilo Valcos, 18, who was shot in the head at the demonstration, died of his wounds

Many protesters were members of the leftist nationalist group Bayan, which means country.

Riot troops barricaded a bridge leading to Marcos' residence with barbed wire and firetrucks, preventing marchers from getting closer than 330 yards to the palace.

A handful of soldiers watched the hour-long protest from the other side of the bridge while most of the troops stood by in a side street. The protesters withdrew after an hour of speeches denouncing Marcos' 20-year government.

Bayan Secretary-General Lean Alejandro, a student leader, told the crowd that Manila police Chief Brig. Gen. Narciso Cabrera was "a demon worse than the devil himself.'

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa Fifty-two American corporate leaders with interests in South Africa pledged Sunday in a newspaper advertisement to "play an active role" in ending apartheid.

The ads were in support of an initiative Sept. 29 by 91 South African corporate leaders who bought newspaper space to urge President P.W. Botha's government to end the country's system of racial separa-

"Today, we add our voice to theirs," said the latest ad, placed by the U.S. Corporate Council on South Africa. It was signed by the council's co-chairmen W. Michael Blumenthal, chairman of the Burroughs Corp., and General Motors Chairman Roger B. Smith.

The advertising campaign demonstrated growing pressure by the business community on South Africa's leaders to end apartheid. There have been widespread campaigns abroad for economic and other sanctions against South Africa and an end to foreign investment in the country, which already is suffering economic problems.

In new riots around the country Sunday, police said they shot three blacks dead and two policemen were wounded by bullets.

Police also announced Sunday that after 14 months of persistent riots, the national force of some 45,000 police will be expanded by 25 per-

State officials have estimated that implementing a new system will be less expensive than current phone service from Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. and American Telephone and Telegraph.

"The object is to cost-contain the voice and data communications cost within a tighter margin than is anticipated by AT&T and Southwestern Bell," said Tom Gallagher, director of University computing activities.

editor Hanna Siniora, referring to the scheduled meetings. Siniora, on a visit to Amman, is one of several Palestinians who have been mentioned as possible participants in a Palestinian delegation to peace talks. He said he believed Jordan and the PLO would patch up their differences. Hussein suggested last week he was near a showdown with Arafat. "In terms of a lot of things that have happened, we're not very happy," Hussein told a news conference.

Rukeyser Jr., NBC's vice president for corporate communications who was contacted by Charren and immediately agreed for NBC to pay for the unique promotional exposure. "In this case, ACT's interests and ours dovetailed. Good programming makes strange bedfellows.

The full-page newspaper ad, written by Charren, was placed in Monday's editions of seven major newspapers, appearing one day before the second installment of NBC's "Main Street." The one-shot $140,500 expense, a figure supplied by NBC, is roughly $30,000 less than ACT's entire operating budget for

In her 17 years lambasting the TV industry for abandoning children. Charren never had actively promoted a program. But she was so impressed by the September episode of "Main Street," with "Today" show host Bryant Gumbel, and was so annoyed that NBC had given the oncea-month afternoon series the promotional cold shoulder that she decided 'to make a little noise for them.' Last month's "Main Street" had segments on strip searches and a South African boy talking about apartheid. Tuesday's program, being broadcast from 3 p.m.-4 p.m. CST, features a 17-year-old AIDS sufferer who contracted the disease from a blood transfusion, a story on tougher academic requirements in Texas high schools making more athletes ineligible for sports, and an interview with an 11-year-old girl who recalls the Mexico City earth-

Charren's ad, featuring four kids beseeching readers with their poinfingers, "Attention...Families With Kids Over 10...ACT wants you to watch NBC's 'Main Street.'"

Rukeyser said the ACT-generated expenditure was more than a monthly afternoon program normally would get. And that was one point of Charren's self-appointed commercial campaign.

"They put this thing on at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and people only found it because they were looking for soap operas," Charren said. "If it failed to get any ratings, then they could cancel it and say, 'See nobody watched it.""

The first installment of "Main Street" averaged a 3.7 rating (percent of the nation's 85.9 million TV homes), which is comparable to the audiences that tune in for the networks' occasional afternoon dramas for children, but lower than afternoon soap operas.

ACT doesn't offically endorse programs, preferring not be a seal of approval. Instead, it lobbies for more and better shows for youth, while representing powerless children in legislative and regulatory hearings.

Professor receives research award

Elizabeth McCullough, associate professor of clothing, textiles and interior design, is the recipient of the Ralph G. Nevins Award for outstanding research contributions in physiology and human response to the environment by the American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air-Conditioning Engineers.

The award recognizes McCullough's work with the K-State team that designed the space glove which won this summer's national competition sponsored by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said the American Society for Engineering Education.

She received the Kansas Flower, Lawn and Garden Show work award for her help with research in horticulture. She presented the results of this work at the American Society of Horticulture Science

Collins is recipient of six scholarships helping her pursue studies at the University.

Brochure describes station history

A new publication about the Southeast Kansas Branch Agricultural Experiment Station of K-State has been produced and is available to the public.

Designed as an information piece, the 16-page, four-color brochure will be distributed to visitors, officials and other people at field days and special events at the station. It describes the station's history, current agricultural research and accomplishments.

Southeast Kansas is the newest of the five branch stations of the KAES, which maintains its main station on the University campus. It is the only branch station in the eastern half of the state.

The station began in 1950 as the Mound Valley Station on 242 acres of a surplus Air Force landing field. After sites were added at Parsons and Columbus, the name was changed to reflect the service area and in 1980 headquarters were moved to Parsons.

Today, the station has 916 acres of experimental fields and its facilities include business offices, meeting rooms and computer facilities as well as many storage buildings. There is 10,000 square feet of laboratory space housing a growth chamber, seed germinator and counter, centrifuge and other analytical equipment.

Lugar says weapons proposal 'unique'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Sen. Richard Lugar, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, says the Soviet Union's "unique" proposal to cut nuclear arms 50 percent moves the arms control process "miles down the trail toward some type of agreement.'

'Giving credit where credit is due, and not (looking at it) as a propaganda ploy but as an interesting and substantive proposal, the Soviet deep-cut situation is unique," the Indiana Republican said in a recent interview with The Associated Press.

"The Soviets haven't offered this kind of thing before," he said. "A year ago they weren't even at the table at all. The fact that they are there and that they have made a

The Soviets haven't offered this kind of thing before. ... The fact ... that they have made a (comprehensive) proposal is significant.

-Sen. Richard Lugar

(comprehensive) proposal is significant," said Lugar, a consistent supporter of Reagan administration foreign policy.

Lugar's statements, taken together with last week's comment by Vice President Bush that the Soviet proposal was a "step in the right direction," probably mark most the positive assessment of the Soviet offer from ranking U.S. officials to date.

But Robert McFarlane, the president's national security adviser, on Sunday reiterated the administration's warning that an arms control agreement hinges on Moscow's willingness to settle regional conflicts and alter its human rights policies.

"President Reagan, probably more than on any other issue, believes that his moment and his reponsibility is to leave office with a real reduction in nuclear weapons," McFarlane said on CBS' "Face The Nation.'

When Secretary of State George P. Shultz goes to Moscow at week's end for pre-summit planning, there could be some progress on such issues as air safety and boundary rights, "if indeed the Soviet Union really wants it," McFarlane said.

Acknowledging strong U.S. objections to the Soviet proposal as it stands, Lugar said he nevertheless found it an encouraging and a positive base for negotiation as both nations prepare for the summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet Leader Mikhail Gor-

"So we're miles down the trail towards some type of agreement with the Soviets if in fact they are of a mind to really proceed with that, and it appears they are at least devoting considerable energy to their negotiating positions," Lugar said in the interview on Friday.

KMKF seeking increase in transmission

By TOM SCHULTES Business Editor

A request to allow an increase in power and transmitting range of Manhattan radio station KMKF-FM, 2414 Casement Road, has been presented to the Federal Communications Commission.

The request, made by the station's owner, Manhattan Broadcasting Co., which also publishes The Manhattan Mercury, would allow the station to upgrade its signal, making it Manhattan's first wide-area coverage FM station. The station would also move from its current 101.7 dial location to 104.7 to avoid interfering with the signal of nearby Interested parties have until Dec. 12 to comment on the proposal by sending formal petitions to the comWashington, D.C., 20554.

KMKF Program Director Roger Hamilton said the request was "nothing unusual," noting the recent requests by Topeka's KMAJ-FM and KTPK-FM.

Hamilton said KMKF's request follows more than a year of planning to reach the northern section of Riley County and grab a greater share of the region's trade and advertising

Buller said KSDB's new 200-foottower on 40,000 square feet of land was a complete, working transmitter. The tower, and a building at the tower site, was donated by KAKE-

Hamilton said KSDB was "very fortunate" to receive the KAKE tower to expand their system.

"They're operators of an alternative service," Hamilton said, noting KMKF was not in competition with KSDB for programming. But, he added, "There's something wrong if (students) don't think we're in competition."

Hamilton said the educational aspect of KSDB teaches students to operate in the real world, part of which includes competition.

U.N. provides discussion

The founders of the United Nations were not demi-gods. They were men of practicality who realized, perhaps better than we, the fallibility of humankind.

They did not set out, as did the framers of the failed League of Nations, to end all war or bring about universal peace and harmony. They simply believed that a forum for international dialogue was preferable to no dialogue. They simply asserted that the right of all nations to be heard, and to listen, was better than the deafening silence which leads to misunderstanding, miscalculation and conflict.

With this in mind, the founders of the United Nations would be pleased to see their organization at 40. Not that it is perfect, but it at least has survived and prospered despite the attempts of many in self-proclaimed peaceloving nations to make it impotent and obsolete.

The New York Times quoted a diplomat as saying that for the past six weeks the UN provided nations an opportunity to tug the world by the sleeve. This alone is important. It is proper for all politicians representing nations with various views to be reminded of the single common denominator of us all. We are all human and we all must share this small earth.

It is this sort of "tugging" which demonstrates the best the United Nations has to offer us all. During a dinner — hosted by Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Ghandi - North Korean Vice President Pak Sung Chul and South Korean Prime Minister Lho Shin Yong had an opportunity to speak informally. This simple meeting represented the highest-level talks between the two nations in more than 13 years and could lead to a lessening of tension in that volatile region.

The United Nations as well offered a forum for Ghandi to meet with Pakistan's President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq. In this meeting the two men, whose nations have battled four times in the last two decades, agreed to begin immediate talks on the vital issues which now separate the two sovereign nations.

And from the representatives of scores of other nations, the story is the same.

The United Nations should not be seen as an end unto itself. It will not alone reduce a nation's need to defend itself. It will not end all conflict or magically promote international understanding and cooperation. The United Nations simply offers the world a process by which differences can be aired and solutions to problems sought. Like any political entity, including our own nation, it is not always successful, but much more importantly, it does not always fail.

We congratulate the United Nations at 40, and we are thankful that men and women with vision and a desire for peace and understanding are able to stay the few who would scrap this most important body because it is not perfect.

Education requires community dedication

Carole Goshorn is special — one of 104 high school science and mathematics teachers who is in Washington this week to receive presidential awards for their excellence in the classroom.

Although she does not look it, the 34-yearold mother of two is one of the front-line fighters in America's battle for survival in the increasingly tough international economic competition. Study after study has shown the United States is doing a worse job on science and math education - the building blocks for tomorrow's technology and industry - than Germany, Japan and other competitor nations.

Despite recent moves in many states to require more and tougher science and math courses in high schools, close to one-third of those classes are taught by people with minimal or no qualifications in those subjects. And the proportion is growing.

Science and math majors can double their teaching salaries by moving into industry. Science-minded college undergraduates tend to shun teaching degrees. Colleges complain that high schools are sending them fewer students with good preparation for science, math and engineering courses. And industry says it cannot find the trained technical and scientific people it needs.

Two years ago, after a wave of reports highlighted these problems, the Reagan administration reversed course. After decimating - reducing to one-tenth - the National Science Foundation programs for math and science education in his first two years, Reagan endorsed an expanded program of scholarships and training for teachers in those fields. The annual presidential awards for two top math and science teachers in each state are the public relations frosting on that cake for the president.

They are also a measure of how far most communities in this nation have to go if they are to provide students with the education that results when a gifted teacher such as Carole Goshorn works in a well-equipped school in a community as supportive of education as Columbus, Ind.

Columbus is the international headquarters of Cummins Engine Co., whose management has made this city of 31,000 a showcase of distinguished architecture and a remarkably comfortable place to live. Along with Arvin Industries and other local firms, the Cummins people have spurred the development of high-quality local schools needed to attract top managers to central Indiana and to educate a skilled work force.

East High, where Goshorn teaches, was designed and built 13 years ago to accommodate and foster team teaching and highly individualized instruction. In the science wing, there are large lecture halls with sophisticated audiovisual equipment, where several classes can get basic instruction at one time. Individual classrooms are very small, holding not more than 20 pupils, so teachers can supervise problem solving and answer questions on a one-on-one basis.

A large modern lab serves several courses, with a full-time lab attendant and at least one teacher on duty at all times. Between the lab and the classrooms, a science library has desks for individual study.

The 1,600-student school draws from an industrial city and a farm county; it is not elitist, but its standards are tough. The other day, Goshorn, wearing a white lab coat with a button reading "Chemists Have Solutions" on her lapel, and her teaching partner Jack Young took perhaps 120 beginning chemistry students through a fast-paced workout on calculating molecular weights of compounds. Her analogies were down-home -"10 to 23rd power is about as many leaves as you'd find on all the trees in Bartholomew County" - but the equations flashed on the screen click-click. No one had time to

With a master's degree in biology from Indiana University, Goshorn could probably double her mid-$20,000 salary in industry. But she and her husband, an administrator at North High, have a commitment to education and welcome the chance to work in a community which has demonstrated its dedication to its schools.

Despite its small size, Columbus has just hired a superintendent away from a swanky Minneapolis suburb by offering him the second-highest education salary in Indiana and a $100,000 "excellence in education" fund, raised from local business and available for projects the superintendent

The recommendations for Goshorn's award, which brings a $5,000 federal grant to her school, noted not only her work on statewide science curriculum development but her skill as a student adviser, her rolemodel status for young women considering science or other professional careers and her enthusiasm for teaching.

"It's wonderful to work in a school and community like this," she said. It is wonderful to watch her in her superb public school. But you have to remember Carole Goshorn stands out as special. America will have to clone her - and the commitment to education her school and community represent many times over to meet the challenges

The mock United Nations The meeting held at K-State Security Council meeting held Saturday was an outstanding chance for students to acquaint themselves with the problems of the world in a non-threatening situation. The mock U.N. meeting provided an opportunity for the average person to discover how the Council works, and why it can be both effective and ineffective.

Many people wonder if the real United Nations is worth the time, effort and money spent to keep it operating.

However, governments of the world that have no other forum for communication meet in the United Nations. There is a greater opportunity to turn the tide of worldwide animosity on the floor of the United Nations than anywhere else in the world. It is at times the last stronghold of rational diplomacy.

this weekend will have little effect on the policy-makers in New York City, and there is little reason to suppose that the decisions made Saturday are precedents for the real Security Council, but this was not the purpose of the Mock Security Council. Rather, if some students were shown the problems of the real United Nations, and the ways in which it deals with those problems, then the meeting was a success.

Better still, though, is the possibility that the spirit in which the United Nations was created shone through Saturday, and the ideal of international cooperation and a peaceable discussion and resolution of differences was born anew. It is an ideal much desired, seldom realized.

Lessons of Grenada invasion include president's lies

According to Mike Riley, the lesson of Grenada is that Communists lie. That may be true. But here's another lesson of Grenada, Ronald Reagan lies.

I remember the president on television, standing by some large aerial photos, telling the nation that what the Cuban airport workers were building on Grenada was a military facility. It was too big to be a commercial airport, said the president. That's why we had to worry about tiny Grenada. The Cubans were making a base for Soviet fighter planes.

As it turns out, the project was supported by loans from the International Monetary Fund and the governments of Britain and Canada. The actual construction was being managed by the Plessy Company, a highly respected British contracting firm. Company officials said the airport was being built to civilian specifications and contained no standard military features, such as hardened fueling facilities or bomb shelters. Moreover, the 10,000-foot runway was shorter than several others on nearby tourist

Riley says captured documents show the Communists were up to no good. Well, I don't think attacking construction workers building an internationally approved of decency either. And if I can't believe the president of the United States when he's looking at me straight in the eye, then why should I believe anything based on some documents laundered for us by his Departments of State # development project is exactly an example Female students seeking education

Re: Janet Costin's letter, "Letters laughable," in the Oct. 22 Collegian:

Costin has missed the point. The problem is not the "insecurity" of the women who are offended by Associate Professor Stanley Ehler's remarks concerning the motives behind women's presence at college.

The problem is the prejudice evidenced by such a remark, as prejudice is often expressed through discriminatory acts. A teacher who believes any particular group of students - be they women, minorities, athletes or fraternity members - is less capable or less dedicated to education and treats that group as such, covertly or overtly, is cheating the students, the University and him or herself. Regardless of any individual's reasons for attending a college course, the instructor is obliged to provide the same quality and level of instruction and to expect as much out of that student as any

In addition, as my Composition I students found in a recent poll of more than 420 students, about half of whom were female, the generalization that women attend college primarily to find a spouse is inaccurate. My students found two women who reported that they were here for the "Mrs." degree. The rest were here for an education, primarily as a stepping stone to a career.

Granted, our sampling was small, but two out of more than 200 seems an awfully weak foundation for such a weighty claim. Unless of course 198 women were lying...or not real women.

Printers succeed and Defense?

Much too often, our society is too quick to condemn the wrongs and recognize only the shortcomings of others. Unfortunately, this holds true for so many of the service departments across campus.

I would like to recognize one department that goes far out of its way to provide quality, professional service along with displaying a positive effort to please its customers. K-State Printing Service deserves to be recognized as the best in-plant printer in Kansas with the best service.

Thanks, K-State Printing Service staff, for a job well done.

HONOLULU - Aircraft were moved from a missile range, resort hotels stored away beach equipment and residents were urged Sunday to tie down loose objects as unpredictable Hurricane Nele wobbled near the Hawaiian islands with winds up to 102 mph.

The center of the storm was at 19.5 degrees north latitude, 165.3 degrees west longitude, about 490 miles southwest of Honolulu on Sunday morning, drifting northward at about

It appeared likely that Nele would pass west of the islands, but its path couldn't be projected with certainty, National Weather Service officials said.

"We're watching it. Anything can happen between now and when we expect it to arrive here," said Dick Sasaki, a weather service forecaster here. "It looks like the center could come within about 100 miles or so west of Kauai."

That could cause heavy showers and strong wind in the area late Sunday or today, but projections were difficult to make, he said.

The state of Hawaii remained under a hurricane watch, meaning hurricane conditions, including strong wind and heavy rain, could occur within 36 hours. Residents were advised to take precautionary measures such as filling car gas tanks, taping or boarding windows, and stocking up on food.

Since the weather across the state was largely calm while the hurricane was still well to the south, visible effects of the approaching storm on routine island life were few.
